Those that make betting a business are often sound in their political judgments. They are at least cold, calculating, sentiment does not cloud their vision.

On the Republican presidential nomination, the betting now stands:

Senator William E. Borah, 8 to 1. Governor Landon of Kansas, 10 to 1. Senator Vandenberg of Michigan, 15 to 1. Colonel Frank Knox of Illinois, 15 to 1. Governor Hoffman of New Jersey, Ogden L. Mills, Senator David A. Reed, all 20 to 1.

Professional bettors agree that Governor Landon is gaining and will probably lead the procession at 6 to 1 in a few days. Band-wagon climbers are more and more polite to Governor Landon.

H. G. Wells, 69, younger and more brilliant than when he wrote "Dr. Moreau's Island" and "The War of the Worlds," now in America on his way to see Hollywood, says:

"The film is a finer art than the novel, stage, or the opera."

Mr. Wells' open mind proves his youth. The moving picture is greater in its possibilities than book, stage or opera, because it contains all three, plus the marvelous power of photography.

When Ruskin, seeing the first old-fashioned photographs, congratulated the world on a discovery that would make the entire world visible to all its inhabitants, he little dreamed what photography would really do.

Mr. Wells, a genius, a Democrat and unspoiled by success, is welcome in America. May he live sixty-nine years more, and write eighty-five more books, all suitable for "the movies."

Mayor LaGuardia, leaving his bed in a New York hospital to talk to mayors of many cities, in Washington, referred to representatives of the New Deal as "semicolon boys" and remarked:

"You can't feed people epigrams and slogans."

The mayor says the "semicolon boys" are holding up jobs for the idle, while ignorant men are appointed to pass on proposals and advice of experts. The mayor, who doesn't choose always to be tactful, calls the "semicolon boys" a boil on the neck of the administration.

Business starts discussing the Canadian-U. S. trade agreement. Congressmen Church of Illinois and Brewster of Maine dislike it, and so do American lumber men, saying through the National Lumber - Manufacturers' Association that a 50 per cent. tariff reduction on Canadian lumber will "paralyze the general economy of important parts of this country."

Republican Congressmen think the Canadian pact will supply good material for Republicans in 1936.

On the other hand, fruit growers of Florida and shipping men of Maine call the agreement a first-class one.

Two unimportant pieces of news intrude, at this point.

In the docks at the foot of Niagara, on the American side, a girl baby, four months old, is found in a paper box, dead.

In a second floor apartment at South Hempstead Village, Long Island, a mother, 23 years old, is found on the floor with her 18-months-old son in her arms, both dead, a refrigerator pushed against the door. The stories back of those dead bodies may seem to the Angel Gabriel more important than the treaty with Canada. To us they are only "minor news items."

The "sanctions" wall thrown by England and France around Italy, smaller nations co-operating, to "suffocate and starve Italy," as Mussolini puts it, is now complete. Two million young organized Italians protest against the effort to punish Italy for doing to Ethiopia what England and France have done to other more nearly civilized countries.

Mussolini says that "England's attitude and sanctions" never will make Italians submit. He mentions "England," not France, knowing that France opposes him against the will of the French government and people and only because the French believe they cannot, by offending England, risk the loss of British support in "the next war with Germany."

Fresh did not have that support in 1870; might not have it again in 1937 or 1938. One war on the continent might be enough to satisfy England for some generations.

The new airport at Newark, N. J., is to have a runway 200 feet wide, 700 feet long, "carpeted" with more than 15,000 square yards of cotton mesh fabric, to be used, steel and con-

Hit-Run Defendant, Mother

Frances Gorman, 21, of Medford, is shown as she appeared with her mother, Mrs. Agnes Gorman, in third district court, East Cambridge, today, to face charges of leaving the scene of an auto accident without making herself known and of operating an automobile so as to endanger the lives and safety of the public. Police say that Miss Gorman was at the wheel of a car which hit and injured two Cambridge high school boys. After she had entered not guilty pleas today, the case was continued to November 26. MANSFIELD ATTACKS RAW DEAL'S RELIEF FAILURE IN BOSTON

PROXY GROOM GETS YEAR IN JAIL

New Bedford, Nov. 19—Herbert H. Mansfield, Jr., 19, of Providence, bridegroom in last June's strange "proxy marriage," was sentenced today in superior court to one year in the House of Correction.

The sentence was imposed by Judge Walter L. Collins after Mansfield had pleaded guilty to two indictment charges, one of perjury and the other of conspiracy to violate the marriage laws.

"This was a deliberate attempt to violate the law," Judge Collins said in passing sentence. "If it had been done on the spur of the moment, I should have been inclined to put it down to the indiscretion of youth."

Gloria Rezo, 15, alien of Providence, indicted with Mansfield on a charge of conspiracy, was not arraigned today, disposition of her case having been put off.

It was charged that Mansfield went through the "proxy" marriage ceremony with Gloria, using the name of Vesta Jean Isherwood, 18, of Nantucket, in hope that he would be legally married to Vesta.

MAY FREE REGO GIRL

Prosecuting officials expressed the belief District Attorney William C. Crossley might not press the indictment returned against Gloria.

The girl is on probation from Taunton District Court on a similar charge growing out of the proxy union.

TELLS OF LOVE LETTERS

Henry Murphy, Mansfield's counsel, drew a contrasting picture.

"I've lots of letters turned over to me by my client, letters burning with love in which she arranged meetings and planned to marry him," he said.

"There is something further in this case that remains uncovered. I don't think this idea was all his own. Knowing him as I do I don't believe he could have thought of it himself."

Miss Isherwood listened attentively to the attorney. She had appeared before the grand jury.

K. C. PLAN BIG ROOSEVELT PROTEST

BULLETIN

Recall of Ambassador Josephus Daniels from Mexico will be demanded by Congressman Hamilton Fish, Jr., of New York, when Congress convenes in January, the congressman declared today in Boston.

Plans for a non-sectarian mass meeting, under sponsorship of Massachusetts Council, Knights of Columbus, were announced today by the Boston Chapter, composed of delegates from subordinate councils.

The meeting will be held at Faneuil Hall in protest over the refusal of President Roosevelt to intervene in behalf of persecuted Christians in Mexico.

The Boston Chapter, a philanthropic branch of the Knights of Columbus discussed the plans at length and forwarded records of the discussion to the state office.

More criticism of President Roosevelt for his refusal to intercede came today before the St. Regis Guild, a representative Catholic organization, in an address by Congressman John P. Higgins of the 10th District.

"It would be far from endangering the good neighbor policy," said Congressman Higgins, "for the President to champion the principle of religious liberty, which, in turn, would win the

Mussolini Calls in All Gold

Rome, Nov. 19 (AP)—Premier Mussolini today established a gold monopoly and laid the groundwork for possible future requisition of private holdings. The decree, effective today, gives control of all gold transactions at home and abroad to the National Institute for Foreign Exchange, with the Ministry of Finance and the Supreme Finance Commission co-operating.

Asmara, Eritrea, Nov. 19—About 2000 Ethiopians were reported officially today to have been killed by 20 Italian bombing planes.

The aerial squadron under General Aimone fought a two-hour battle with a strong Ethiopian land force, official reports said, and the Fascist planes scored an average of a dozen hits.

The battle was described by authorities as the most important aerial encounter since the World War.

The bombers were constantly under severe rifle and anti-aircraft shell fire.

Premier Mussolini's two aviator sons, Bruno and Vittorio, and Il Duce's son-in-law, Count Galeazzo Ciano, fought with the squadron on the northern front.

Bruno's plane was hit seven times and Vittorio's nine.

JOBS MONEY IS 'DIVERTED,' HE CHARGES

Washington, Nov. 19—Mayor Mansfield of Boston branded the Federal relief program a failure today in a speech before the United States Conference of Mayors.

National Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins had hardly finished a speech, defending the relief program, when the Boston mayor launched into his attack.

He charged that the Federal government, after promising to take all the employables off the municipal relief rolls, was leaving 12,000 employes on the welfare list in Boston alone.

SAYS FUNDS DIVERTED

He charged that part of the five-billion-dollar relief fund had been "diverted from its intended purpose."

He said that federal delays had made it impossible for the various municipalities to carry out their own program of relief.

Mayor Mansfield's speech made a decided impression on the gathering, in spite of Administrator Hopkins' earlier defense of his own organization and a later defending speech by Mayor LaGuardia of New York.

The Federal relief breakdown in Massachusetts, as related by Mayor Mansfield, has been described in detail by the Boston Evening American, during the past two months.

Mayor Mansfield said:

DUCE'S SONS BATTLE HEROES AS 2000 OF FOE FALL

FOLLOW BROTHER-IN-LAW IN AERIAL BOMBARDMENT

Two planes — Ciano's and another — were forced down.

One Italian mechanic was wounded seriously.

An official communique lauded the work of Premier Mussolini's two sons.

"Attention is called to the heroism and disdain of danger demonstrated by all the personnel," it said.

Particular mention must be made of Vittorio and Bruno Mussolini who, when their machine gun ammunition was exhausted, continued to shoot with rifles carried in their plane.

After the battle, official reports said, scouting planes found hundreds of Ethiopians dead in the valley of combat.

COUNT CIANO'S OWN STORY

Their camp, officials said, was broken up completely.

The engagement was considered extraordinary by military experts as a kind of pitched battle between air and land forces.

Sergeant Birago, one of the heroes of the battle, officials announced, will be proposed for a medal of valor.

Count Ciano told this story of the battle:

"We started the 20 planes early in the morning intending to break up a concentration of enemy we sighted south of Makale, near Bula.

"We found between 6000 and 8000 enemy gathered in the deep valley near Bula.

"I gave the signal for the ground attack.

"We dove within 100 feet of the ground and dropped incendiary bombs on the camp. At the same time we machine-gunned them.

"We dove in Indian file. As each plane swooped down, it dropped bombs and simultaneously worked machine guns.

"We saw the Ethiopians scatter fast, but we got hundreds of them before they could take shelter. Probably we got more than 1000 of them.

BOMBS START FIRES

"Incendiary bombs set fire to the encampment.

"At the same time, however, we noticed concentrations of machine guns, anti-aircraft guns and riflemen on the heights overlooking the valley.

"They were firing on us, their bullets going through our planes.

"We swept clear the valley and then I gave the signal to some down again on the camp.

"We again and again, and let them have bombs and machine gun bullets.

"Then, one of their bullets hit our oil tank. I had to give the word to return and land at Makale.

"I found anti-aircraft shells had hit my mudguard, oil tank and rudder. Thirty-six bullets riddled the plane.

"We were flying so low in the valley that the Ethiopians on the mountain tops actually were firing down on us.

"One of my wings bears the small marks of shots from a shotgun.

"The other plane which had to make a forced landing near Hausien had its landing gear broken in coming down, but none of the crew was injured.

MECHANIC WOUNDED

"Baron Ostini, piloting the numberfive plane, returned to Asmara with his mechanic suffering from a fractured leg.

"The mechanic, however, scribbled notes on bloody cards such as, 'They got me, but we got a huge number of them,' and 'Long live the disperata (desperate) squadron,' which he asked Ostini to give to me.

"Throughout the return flight, Ostini's relief pilot held a finger in a bullet hole in the gas tank.

"We found each plane of the 20 had 10 or 15 bullet holes."

Birago, a mechanic, was shot in the leg while working a machine gun during the combat.

When his gun jammed, he climbed to the upper machine gun post although he was wounded, and continued firing until Ostini ordered him to descend.

RECALLS WORLD WAR

Authorities described the battle as the most important air engagement since the World War.

An Ethiopian force, estimated at between 15,000 and 20,000, was concentrated in the narrow valley of Mai Mescle, south of Bula, which is north of south of Makale, most advanced point of the main Italian forces on the northern front.

The battle lasted from 8:40 a. m. to 10:40 a. m. yesterday, with incessant bombing and machine gunning.

The planes swooped down to within 100 feet of the ground, dropping 44-pound bombs.

Count Ciano's plane was obliged to return Makale. Other planes came down in the mountainous country not far from the scene of action.

Count Ciano was brought back to Asmara, in the interior of Italy's east African colony of Eritrea, in another plane.

He told the Associated Press his own ship was struck by three anti-aircraft shells and 36 machine gun and rifle bullets.

Win Citations for Bravery in Big Air Attack on Ethiopians

(Pictures from International News Photograph Service)

New honors belong today to this Italian airman, Count Galeazzo Ciano, son-in-law of Mussolini. His latest citation for bravery was won in an attack on Ethiopian forces near Makale. After his plane had been forced down with a disabled engine, he made repairs and went aloft again. Bruno and Vittorio Mussolini, sons of the premier, also distinguished themselves in the action. Official dispatches report 2000 Ethiopian dead.

VITTORIO MUSSOLINI

BRUNO MUSSOLINI

Cited for bravery today are these two flyer sons of Premier Mussolini of Italy. They joined in an air attack on Ethiopians concentrated south of Makale. Bruno Mussolini's plane was hit seven times, Vittorio Mussolini's nine times.

U. S. Warned of 'Reprisals' After Talk by Mussolini

Rome, Nov. 19 (INS)—Climaxing a three-hour meeting of the Fascist grand council to formulate Italy's campaign of reprisals against league penalties, Premier Mussolini today demanded use of the nation's armed strength to resist the international boycott if necessary.

Other quarters warned the United States against withholding essential supplies from Italy.

An assertion that Italy will boycott American-made goods unless the United States excludes oil and other vital supplies from its embargo list under the neutrality act was voiced by an authoritative source.

LINKS U. S. WITH BRITAIN

This warning, coming as Italy formally opened her counter-offensive, was directly opposed to the recent statement of Secretary of State Cordell Hull that shipment of "essential war materials" to Italy was contrary to the policy of the American government.

The declaration that the United States will be considered a member of "Britain's sanctions camp" if oil supplies to Italy are cut off, and will be "treated as such," followed violent demonstrations in Rome against applications of sanctions.

After a stirring address, Mussolini received assurances from the grand council that it would support him to the limit. A communique stated:

"Mussolini spoke for more than two hours.

"Dino Grandi (Italian ambassador to London), Senator Guglielmo Marconi, Italo Balbo (Governor of Libya), and Finance Minister Thao Di Revel spoke briefly."

More than 2000 persons rounded up from motion picture crowds by Fascist officials demonstrated briefly at the Piazza Venezia when the grand council session broke up.

Mussolini and his lieutenants are now faced with the task of drafting a plan to enable Italy to become and remain virtually self-supporting. It was because of this that the grand council held its second session in 48 hours.

WARNING TO AMERICA

Regarding the warning to America, an official spokesman declared the Italian government is watching closely "an apparent move by the United States to classify oil as a war material."

It was pointed out sudden stoppage of oil supplies from America would seriously hamper the mechanized troops in Africa.

Repeating that if America included oil and scrap iron in the list of goods prohibited Italy she would be regarded as participating in sanctions and would then be "subject to the same economic treatment dealt to other nations." The spokesman, nevertheless, expressed hope the United States would continue to "stay out of this affair."

Emperor Haile Selassie Flies to North War Front

London, Nov. 19 (INS)—Emperor Haile Selassie left Addis Ababa by airplane today for the northern battle front, according to an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from the Ethiopian capital.

By H. R. KNICKERBOCKER

Addis Ababa, Nov. 19 (INS)—Preceding Emperor Haile Selassie by a short time, a huge caravan of news-starved reporters and picture-hungry cameramen streamed from Addis Ababa today in the first officially sponsored movement towards the vicinity of that region optimistically known as "the front."

Map diagram shows where Italian bombing planes attacked Ethiopian ground forces near Bula, south of Makale (A), inflicting losses officially set at 2000, but estimated at 5000 by British war correspondents.

The actual destination is Dessye, which can be reached in two or three days by truck over incredibly difficult roads.

Dessye, however, is actually 250 miles from the Makale-Aduwa-Aksum front, and is equally distant from the Danakil front.

But it is supposed to be the base camp for Minister of War Ras Moulougetta, and from it the northern operations will be directed.

More correspondents and cameramen had already sent ahead mule caravans due to reach Dessye in another two days, simultaneously with the trucks.

Twenty of the emperor's trucks containing his personal effects left at the same time.

After a brief visit at Dessye, it is expected the emperor will go south and inspect the Harar front.

Before departing for the front the Emperor today gave an interview in which he expresses much doubt as to the effect of League of Nations penalties against Italy.

He said he was grateful for League action but that he believed war would never have been begun by Italy if such measures were of a force sufficient to prevent it.

Speaking of the position of the Ethiopian armies in the field, the Emperor was noticeably optimistic saying they had not yet met defeat and have not met the enemy in full force.

Triple Wedding Of Six, All Akin

Bloomington, Ind., Nov. 19 (AP)—Two sisters and a brother and three cousins joined in a triple wedding here today, the six persons repeating the vows in unison, but being pronounced man and wife separately.

Carl Wright married Catherine Stewart; Eugene Swafford married Viola Wright and Basil Stewart married Ruby Wright. The Wrights are brothers an dsisters, the Stewarts are cousins and Catherine Stewart is a cousin of Eugene Swafford.

In the Stars

Addis Ababa, Nov. 19—Emperor Selassie's astrologers have predicted a decisive battle early in December. They said it would last four days, beginning on a Thursday, and would result in complete victory for Ethiopia. Selassie himself will lead the onslaught, the astrologers declared. Ethiopians recalled previous accurate forecasts by astrologers, including a prediction of victory in the 1896 battle of Adawa. The Emperor has great faith in astrologers.

Ickes Begins Probe of Nazi Steel Deal

Washington, Nov. 19 (INS)—PWA Administrator Ickes today announced he was preparing a "statement of fact" to send to President Roosevelt as a basis for a federal trade commission investigation of the awarding of two contracts to a German steel company for PWA projects.

He also announced that PWA had increased, effective today, its differential from 15 per cent on all orders above $10,000 to 25 per cent on all orders above $100 in favor of American producers of materials used on PWA projects.

Italian Oil Fears Held Groundless

Washington, Nov. 19 (US)—Italian fears that the United States may embargo shipments of oil to Italy are without foundation.

The Italian threat of economic reprisals in event America takes such a step was brought to the attention of state department officials.

They pointed to the statement by Secretary Hull Friday as the last word on the subject. In this, the secretary admitted such articles as oil, copper, motor vehicles and scrap iron and steel are "not actually arms, ammunition or implements of war."

Under the neutrality act, an embargo is limited to such armaments.

most cordial admiration of the vast majority of Mexican people and from the populations of all other Latin-American countries.

"There are so many precedents for the President to act upon this matter, dating back to 1840, when th then secretary of state, John Forsyth, acting under the direction of President Van Buren, interposed his good offices on behalf of the oppressed and persecuted race of the Jews in Constantinople.

"Continually through the years, there were denunciations by the Secretaries of State, Evarts in 1878, Hamilton Fish in 1876, James G. Blaine in 1891.

"The President, in his answer to the Knights of Columbus within the last few days, seemingly with deliberation, used the word 'intervention' in Mexico.

"The leaders of this movement have always been unalterably opposed to intervention and placed the question as one of a moral vindication of an ethical principle.

"It has been held by those interested in this question that the American government should be vitally interested in the principle of religious liberty.

"At no time has it been suggested that the present administration use language in an official note sent to Mexico that would indicate that they wanted to dictate the policy of other nations, but rather to indicate that the moral duty of nations requires that they should use their power with due respect for the result which its exercise will produce on the rest of the world."

BRITAIN HOLDS NAZI AS SPY

London, Nov. 19 (INS)—A sensation was caused in London today with revelation that Dr. Hermann Goetz, a German who was arrested recently in England upon returning to this country from Germany, is charged with espionage in England under the official secrets act.

Goetz is now in prison under remand, and authorities refuse to give out any information regarding him.

It is understood, however, that Goetz, who was a frequent visitor to England before and after the World War, was recently accompanied by a beautiful blonde, said to be his daughter or niece, who was working as his secretary.

According to reports, he was found in possession of documents contrary to the official secrets act.

lief rolls will be uncared for by the federal government.

"In other words, there is a substantial failure by the federal government up to the present moment, to provide for the relief of these persons, and there is no present indication that provision will be made for them.

CITY RAISED $5,800,000

"In Boston, we raised $5,800,000 by taxation for welfare disbursement and plan to borrow up to $8,000,000 for such additional welfare expenditures as may be necessary.

"Yet delays in the federal program have compelled us to borrow $2,000,000 additional after expending the $11,800,000 raised by taxation and borrowing and our relief costs for 1935 are not substantially less than those for 1934.

"President Roosevelt proposed the relief fund to provide jobs for 3,500,000 employable persons on relief.

CUT TO $800 PER MAN

"It needs only simple arithmetic to show that the average allotment per man was $1200, yet large federal public works projects were approved calling for expenditures of large sums from the fund for materials."

Mansfield contended this had cut the available fund per man employed to about $800 and that cities and other local government units therefore had been unable to plan an intelligent relief budget.

He asked the mayors to take action regarding the asserted "diversion."

Mayor LaGuardia, who yesterday criticized "red tape" in the Public Works Administration, defended the Works Progress Administration.

Any delays or ineffectivness in its program could be traced to "your state and city governments," he told the conference.

Wild Truck Halts At Store's Door

A driverless, one-ton truck "ran away" today in Medford street, Somerville. It rolled across the Northern Artery, turned a corner, went over a curb and halted in the doorway of a business and residential store at Cross street.

Angelo J. Granna, the driver, said he left his tanker for just a moment while delivering 10 gallons of crude petroleum.

Customarily he sets his brakes, he told Somerville police, and did so this morning, but somehow the brakes unlocked and the incline of Medford street did the rest.

Fortunately the truck encountered no traffic in Northern Artery, and an iron railing in front of the small store of Jack Arcoshian, which the truck tore down, prevented the store front from being wrecked.

Peiping, Nov. 19—A pro-Japanese "autonomous" state of five provinces of North China must be established by noon tomorrow (11:00 p. m. Wednesday) or else thousands of Japanese troops now massed just outside the Great Wall will march southward and occupy all of North China, Major Kenji Doihara ruled in an ultimatum today.

Major Doihara is in charge of a special Japanese army mission to carry out Japanese aims in North China. His word is regarded as law in these matters as far as the Japanese Kwantung (Continental) Army is concerned.

JAPAN TO USE FORCE

According to the terms of the ultimatum, unless the 100,000,000 Chinese of the provinces of Chahar, Suiyuan, Hopei, Shantung, and Shensi divorce themselves from the Chinese government at Nanking and establish the pro-Japanese "autonomous" state, the Japanese armies will march southward to effect the Japanese aims by force.

Peiping was extremely calm all day despite the ultimatum. It might have been an ominous silence. The rat-a-tat-tat of Japanese machine gun practice beyond the east wall of the city was a day-long reminder to Peiping citizens of the presence of Japanese military strength all about them.

Mayor Chin Teh-Chun of Peiping assured International News Service tonight that he would guarantee the safety of Americans and other foreign residents during the crisis.

CIVIL WAR NEXT

However, beyond that, no one in high position dared to predict what would happen. It was possible the new state would be established bloodlessly, the Japanese attaking their goal merely with the threat of the army units now north of the Great Wall at Shanhaikuan.

On the other hand, certain anti-Japanese leaders of North China have announced they would bitterly fight any attempt by the Japanese to duplicate their Manchurian annexation program.

Some sources said refusal of Nanking to allow establishment of the autonomous state would result in suicidal civil war in which Japan would be ready to see that the "right side" won.

General Sung Cheh-Yuan, commander of the Chinese garrison at Peiping, a leader approved by the Japanese, was stated to become head of the pro-Japanese state.

Chinese Nationalists Call for Conscription

Nanking, China, Nov. 19 (AP)—Delegates to the Kuomintang (Nationalist Party) Congress here today decided to instruct the government to enforce a program of nationwide conscription for military service.

The threat of China's semi-detachment from its northern provinces forced the decision. The law providing for conscription was adopted in 1933, but never enforced.

China Reported Ready To Recognize Regime

Tokio, Nov. 19—The Central Chinese government has decided not to attempt to interfere with the North China independence movement and to give tacit recognition to the new regime, the Rengo (Japanese) correspondent reported today from Nanking.

Seventy-two years ago today, a tall man with a sad face delivered a speech that will be learned by heart generations to come. The man was Abraham Lincoln, delivering his Gettysburg address, November 19, 1863.

Some changes would startle him if he could return, but he would find no change in his formula:

"You can fool some of the people all of the time, all of the people some of the time, but not all of the people all of the time."

Boston AUTO SHOW
MECHANICS BUILDING
All This Week
10 A. M. to 10:30 P. M.
A CAR A DAY GIVEN AWAY

CURLEY, 61 Tomorrow, JOKES

'ROLLING DOWN HILL,' HE SAYS

Governor Curley will celebrate his 61st birthday with a full day's work tomorrow and a quiet evening at home with his family and friends.

The Governor said he plans to appear for a short time at the automobile show but would have to pass up his scheduled visit to Cotuit to receive his fifth degree in the State Grange.

Following the regular meeting of the executive council, the governor will attend a luncheon of councillors and former councillors at the Parker House.

Office attaches plan to present the governor during the day with a humidor.

Not So Joyful

"Birthdays now are not such joyful occasions," the governor commented, "when you realize that you are rolling down on the wrong side of the hill."

Asked about appointments at tomorrow's session of the council, the governor said he will send in the name of James T. Moriarty of Roxbindale, former head of the State Federation of Labor, to succeed the late Commissioner of Labor and Industries DeWitt C. DeWolf.

He expected also to submit the name of City Councillor Thomas Gren of Charlestown for commissioner of civil service in place of the present commissioner, James H. Hurley, whose appointment expires on December 1.

For the most part, he said, appointments to be submitted will be for minor offices.

No One Indispensable

The governor said that there is not a candidate for every position as was to be expected.

But he expressed surprise over discovering that those now holding the positions are "laboring under the impression that the world will collapse if they are replaced."

"No one is indispensible," the Governor declared.

He stated, in reply to a question, that he has to come to no decision yet on the question of re-appointing or replacing Commissioner of Education Payson Smith.

Halliwell Talked For Labor Post

Representative John Halliwell, Republican, of New Bedford, one of the best known veteran legislators and an authority on municipal finance, may be named associate commissioner of labor and industries. It was reported around Governor Curley's office today.

If appointed, Halliwell would succeed Edward Fisher, Democrat, of Lowell, whose term expires December 1. The position pays $4000 a year for a three-year appointment.

Others mentioned for the post include former Representative C. F. Nelson Pratt, Saugus, Republican, and Representative John J. Whelan, Brockton, Democrat.

Scottsboro Trials To Start Jan. 6

Montgomery, Ala., Nov. 19 (AP)—The nine Negro defendants in the Scottsboro case will be arraigned in Decatur, Ala., December, 16 and the first trial will begin January 6, Lieutenant-Governor Thomas E. Knight, special prosecutor, announced today.

Trial of the first of the defendants will begin almost five years from the date of the alleged attack on two white women aboard a freight train, March 25, 1931.

Cab Theft Charged

Frank Goubea, 28, of Lothrop street, Brighton, faced court action today after allegedly driving away with a taxicab in which he had ridden home, while the driver was collecting part of the fare from Goubea's wife. The cab collided with another machine in Watertown, leading to Goubea's arrest.

Tag Day Here December 7 To Aid Will Rogers Fund

Plans for a Will Rogers Tag Day, December 7, to climax the state drive for contributions to the Will Rogers Memorial Commission were announced today through P. A. O'Connell, executive chairman of the Massachusetts committee.

The nature of the tags has not yet been decided. They will be distributed among all who care to contribute even as little as a penny to the fund that will be used for memorials to be chosen by national leaders, including Alfred E. Smith, Henry Ford, Jesse H. Jones, Will H. Hays, Owen D. Young, Herbert Hoover and Vice-President Garner.

Not for any definite amount, but to enroll the largest number possible from among those who laughed with Will Rogers, is the goal of the drive, said Melvin Morse, speaking for Mr. O'Connell.

SEEK SMALL GIFTS

Nickels from thousands, rather than dollars from hundreds, is the aim.

No cold shaft of marble, but living memorials to the great philosopher-comedian, will be selected by the national commission, the number to depend upon the number of contributions.

Within a few days, local chairmen will be appointed for every city and town, contribution boxes will be placed in all hotels, restaurants and other public congregating places. Banks will accept contributions of any amount.

Although within a few days the first contribution figures will be available, the primary aim will be to estimate the number of contributors, in line with a telegram received today by Mr. O'Connell from Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, war ace and member of the national committee. The telegram was as follows:

"Urge special publicity on the number of 5, 10 and 25-cent contributions. Will Rogers would far rather have had 50,000 five-cent presents than 10,000 large ones."

The state drive will continue until December 7, the tag day, and the close will be marked by various functions.

FLIERS TO AID

Additional plans will be drafted late today at a meeting of the state committee in the State House rooms provided by Governor Curley.

Local aviation units will cooperate in the drive and plans to utilize the services of the airmen will be worked out.

Tide of Small Coins Swell Rogers' Fund

New York, Nov. 19 (INS)—An ever-increasing tide of small coins, small bills and large bills, money orders and checks continued today to swell the Will Rogers Memorial Commission Fund.

Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, director of the operations committee, announced that from Oklahoma, the cowboy-philosopher's home state, came the largest single group of contributors, 6000 Oklahoma City school children.

From New York $2500 was received in one day.

TEACHER Tells of KILLING

GIRL, 11, SAW FATAL BLOWS

Wise, Va., Nov. 19 (INS)—Edith Maxwell, the mountain school ma'am who flaunted the ancient code of the hill country by parental defiance, took the witness stand today in her trial for the murder of her father.

Mary Catherine Maxwell, her 11-year-old sister, had just finished sobbing a poignant description of the mad night when Edith killed Trigg Maxwell in their home on the "Trail of the Lonesome Pine" when defense counsel called the defendant to the witness box.

The pathetically tiny Mary Catherine was there when her sister came home "nigh onto midnigh" and resisted a flogging which Trigg Maxwell would have administered.

Child's Story

From the effect of blows which the modern-minded Edith rained on her father's head, he died.

Mary Catherine through childishly-bewildered eyes saw all of this.

She told her story—a story of the black fury of a father whom, she said, was drunk on the night when Edith came home and he tried to whip her for staying out late. The child's lips faltered:

"I saw it—I saw," she said with blanching face—"I saw my poppy drunk. And I asked him to come in the house.

"My poppy said to mommy, 'I'll break your damn neck.'"

Edith, sitting by her brother Earl at the defense table, broke down and wept silently.

The little girl sobbed out the whole miserable story. She had to tell of the hates and fears and jealousies of an adult world.

"Daddy's Dying"

Amid sobs, she told of her father threatening to whip her sister. She told of their struggle, her father wielding a butcher knife, and lastly she told how her sister defended herself with a high-heeled slipper. She described the blows that felled her father, but she pictured her sister striking in self-defense.

The child underwent an hour's cross-examination, but she held steadfastly to her story.

Near the conclusion, Mary Catherine said she was scared on the night of her father's death.

"What were you scared of?" asked W. Vicars, assistant district attorney.

"You'd a'been scared, too, if you'd been a-lyin' there all cut down and a-dying," the child came back.

When Edith took the stand to defend herself her face streamed with tears and her voice broke, as she told the story of a drunken father who tried to kill her and who died instead.

"I wouldn't have hurt him for the world," she said with quivering lips.

Held Up Knife

Edith went out with her boy friend, Raymond Meade, one July night, she said, and when she came home after midnight found her father in a black rage. He had rebelled against the ancient code of this hill country that decent women come in when the chickens go to roost.

"When I came in, Mary Catherine told me not to go in the kitchen—that Daddy was mad," Edith went on. "Then I heard him; he was mumbling and Mary Catherine said he was going to run me and Raymond from home."

And then, said Edith, he was mad.

"I said to my daddy—'You might kick me out, but you'll never run mommy away.'

"He picked up a butcher knife.

"He just grabbed that knife and held it up like this."

The mountain school teacher flung back her brown coat, and held her right arm up as if to strike.

"Don't Stab Me!"

"And I said—'Don't you—don't stab me!' I grabbed his hand and the knife dropped. And then he grabbed me by the hair, and pulled me into the kitchen. And then he stumbled and fell, and let loose my hair.

"I started back to the bedroom, but he made another lunge at me, and he grabbed me—and he shoved me backwards towards a chair."

The girl's face was streaming tears. Tears stained her blue frock.

"He said to me—my daddy did—he said to me, 'Edith, I'm a-goin' to finish you!'

"I wouldn't a' hurt him. I was afraid of him.

"And so, when he stumbled, I felt something on the floor and it was a shoe.

"And I grabbed the shoe and I hit him. I don't know how many times.

"My clothes were torn half off me. I wouldn't have hurt him for the world!"

WAITING FOR YOU, DADDY

Wrestler Soon to See Husky Son and Heir

HE MAY BE MAT CHAMP

(Pictures from International News Photograph Service)

Although heavyweight wrestler Leo (Numa) Anderson, daddy of this bouncing youngster, is absent on ring wars at Montreal, Mrs. Ellen Anderson, the mother, and the Anderson scion, himself, seem to be carrying on in the best traditions of the family. The child was born at the McLeod Hospital, Beacon street, Back Bay.

Leo Numa, 220-pound wrestler who lost out last Friday to Dan O'Mahony, the champion in a title match, has a rival in his own home, it was learned today—but the rival is just 212 pounds 11 ounces lighter.

The blonde mat Adonis, who used to captain the University of Washington crew on the Pacific coast, became a father early Sunday, but being the former "Black Secret" of the mat, Leo kept it secret.

Numa, whose real name is Anderson, had barely time to get a first glimpse of his new son at the McLeod Hospital, 845 Beacon street, and to congratulate his young wife, Mrs. Ellen Anderson, before he was compelled to leave for Montreal to fill a wrestling date last night with Henry Piera, the "Flying Dutchman," who has been a father six years.

Today, however, Numa was hastening back to his wife's bedside for another look at the newcomer.

SHE WARS ON POLICE

Mother of 7 Wants 'G-Men's' Aid

Declaring she would get the "G-men" to clean out the Boston Police Department, Mrs. Margaret O'Connor of Dedham street, Hyde Park, wife of a jailed ex-policeman, caused a stir at the State House and Courthouse today.

She took her seven children with her, first to the Governor's offices and then to the office of District Attorney Foley in Pemberton square.

She carried the two smallest children, James, 3, and Roderick, 5 months, while Alford, 5; Herbert 7; Marjorie, 10; Marian, 12, and Charles, 13, trailed behind her.

Her husband, Charles L. O'Connor, who resigned from the police department in September, was sentenced to the House of Correction yesterday for six months for drunken driving, leaving the scene of an accident and driving as to endanger.

One of the Governor's secretaries, Al Smith, led the O'Connor delegation from the state house to the district attorney's office. That official was gone for the day and, after delivering her remarks, Mrs. O'Connor said she would return tomorrow.

"My husband was innocent," she said.

"I'm going to clean out the police department and I'll bring in the federal agents to do it. I know plenty. I can tell the names of plenty at headquarters whom ought to be in jail."

CURSE Recalled IN DEATH

BOSTON GIRL TUT "VICTIM"

Death of a Boston girl at Saranac lake, N. Y., today revived the legend of the curse of King Tut which has been connected with a score of deaths since the Pharaoh's tomb was opened and rifled 12 years ago.

The latest victim is Miss Frances Winlock, 21, daughter of Herbert Winlock, formerly of this city, one of those present at the opening of the tomb, and ironically enough, one who has scoffed at the idea of a curse throughout the years.

Miss Winlock, a graduate of Milton Academy, died after a lengthy illness and her body will be brought to Boston for burial Thursday.

Interment will be at Mt. Auburn Cemetery, Cambridge. The girl is a niece of Miss Mary P. Wincolk of Langdon street, Cambridge.

Many Tragedies

Her father, now director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York city, insisted today that the so-called "curse" had nothing to do with her death, but a long list of tragedies that befell those connected directly or indirectly with the Egyptian expedition was recalled.

Miss Winlock accompanied her father on the trip, but was in Cairo at the time that the mummy was actually discovered.

Those who attach significance to the inscribed warning of doom on the coffin of the dead king, today pointed to the death in this city less than two years ago of Dr. Albert M. Lythgoe, another member of the expedition, after a mystery illness.

Dr. Lythgoe was also present at the opening of the inner chamber of the Pharaoh on February, 1923. He was the 10th eminent scientist to die since the famous discovery.

Theory Contested

At the time of Dr. Lythgoe's death, Winlock offered proof to explode the legend of the curse, declaring that neither an angel of vengeance nor germs supernaturally preserved in the sarcophagus had infected the excavators.

However, less than a year after Lythgoe's death, Harold Moyne, a London journalist who witnessed the opening of the tomb, was found dead in bed under mysterious circumstances.

Moyne never commented regarding his belief in the legendary curse. A rush call

"Death shall come with swift wings to him that toucheth the tomb of Pharaoh."

The long list of tragedies is headed by the death of Lord Carnarvon, who headed the expedition. He died from an insect bite only a few months after the opening of the tomb, and since his death, talk of the curse has spread.

Juicy Snow

Evanston, Ill., Nov. 19 (AP)—Policemen Eugene Sanford and A. E. Feeley made their way through a cross-fire of fruit in a vacant lot and asked two men why they were pelting each other with oranges.

"Think is a snow ball fight except we ain't got any snow," answered one.

The patrolmen took the two men and a bag of 10 dozen used oranges to the station, where a fruit dealer had reported the oranges were taken from his store.

HUNT BURGLAR IN GIRL ATTACK

Police combed the South End today for a boudoir burglar in hiding, his face marked by the fingernails of 17-year-old Betty Gammons as she sluceessfully fought him for her life.

The girl, choked, beaten and robbed of $2 by a six-foot burglar who climbed a fire-escape in her bedroom in a Chandler street house, is still in City Hospital.

In her desperate struggle with the man she awakened to find standing beside her bed, she inflicted several deep scratch wounds.

These, police believe, may identify the boudoir invader and lead to his capture.

Two South End men whose names were mentioned in a telephone tip to Sergeant Edward Kelley of the Warren avenue station are being sought.

Scratches on the face of either will result in an arrest, police said.

X-rays to determine the extent of head injuries suffered by the girl, a record clerk in a Shawmut avenue office, will be taken later.

Boston Thrills Baroness, Guest Again After 50 Years

After 5 years' absence, Baroness Louise Herzenstas of Vienna, nee Mathilda Louise Price of Philadelphia, is re-discovering America.

She has miraculously escaped alive from revolutions and has breathlessly watched empires totter, but she insists:

"I have never seen anything so world-rocking as an American skyscraper or so reassuring as the magical management of traffic in this country.

"To me, fresh from Central Europe and its network of Frontiers and passports and visas and its endlessly drab desperation and heartbreaking want, America is the Promised Land. Or should I, an American, even though 50 years removed, voice my admiration so enthusiastically?"

The baroness, widow of a Hungarian nobleman who served as chamberlain to the late Emperor Franz Joseph of Austria, is the house-guest of her good friend, Mrs. William Power Blodget of Pinckney street.

Since her arrival in this country, she has visited briefly in Philadelphia, where she was entertained by Governor and Mrs. Earle; in Washington, where she renewed many friendships made on the Continent with the Capital's social prominents, and in Wilmington, Del., her childhood home.

"I told myself before I left Europe," Boston's charming visitor told the Boston Evening American representative last night, "that Washington and Boston would be my favorite cities. Washington is all that I expected and Boston, well—I've just seen it in the rain—but even under that disadvantage I find it utterly delightful."

And of America generally?

"I wish I might have my children about me and live here the rest of my life.

U. S. SPENDING SEEN AS HIGH PRICE CAUSE

A solemn warning against the present policy of extravagance of the Roosevelt administration had been sounded today by Dr. Melvin Copeland, professor of marketing at the Harvard Business School.

In an address before the Economic Club at Providence, R. I., Dr. Copeland declared that there is no end to the increase in the cost of living as long as the practice of government spending beyond its income is continued.

"So long as the government is spending more than its income, more inflationary fuel is being poured out and no end to the rise in the cost of living is in sight," he declared.

Dr. Copeland vigorously denounced not only the Roosevelt program, but the administration's apparent "alibi" for the Roosevelt "boomerang."

EFFORT FAILS

He charged that the President's scheme to raise commodity prices to pre-depression levels has resulted in failure as far as the people are concerned.

"Faced with antagonism toward higher prices, the administration now is attributing the rise in the cost of living to wasteful or evil practices in business," the speaker declared.

But he pointed out that the "alphabet agencies" are to blame themselves for the evil in that they have not accomplished their avowed purposes.

"Recently, certain administration spokesmen have been promulgating a defense that AAA taxes the non-farming public for the benefit of the farmers just as the tariff is assumed to tax the farmers for the benefit of those engaged in the tariff-protected industries," he declared.

"By stopping the free flow of gold and devaluing the dollar, however, the administration has set up a new barrier to imports.

"We get more cheap dollars for the goods that we export, but we have to pay more cheap dollars for the goods that we import. The cost of importing goods into the United States therefore has been increased to the degree that the dollar has been depreciated.

"Since the prices of all goods affected by the tariff must be influenced also by this new foreign exchange barrier, the AAA benefits to the farmer do not accomplish their purpose.

"If those benefits do compensate for the tariff, they do not compensate also for the effects of devaluing the dollar."

OLD STORY

Declaring that the administration is now trying to shift the blame for the responsibilities of its own acts, Dr. Copeland declared:

"The old story apparently is to be repeated. The administration is now becoming frightened at the effects of the policy announced so clearly in 1933.

"The drouth, instead of being welcomed as an aid, is now being used as an alibi and an attack on business is being launched.

"At this point, let me state that I hold no brief for either political party. As a matter of fact, I personally would prefer to have a chance to vote for a Democrat of the type of Carter Glass or Al Smith than for various Republican aspirants whom I will not mention."

Dr. Copeland warned that if the government's new campaign to shift the responsibility of higher prices is successful there would be an additional jeopardy.

"Santa Claus' bill must be paid," he said. "If the general public does not pay for this program either by direct taxes or through higher prices which yield higher taxes on profits, it will pay eventually in other and still more costly ways.

"I suggest that the President acknowledge frankly that the rise in the cost of living is the result of his policies."

Quincy Coal Fire Causes $1000 Loss

A fire in the coal pockets of the Fore River Coal Company, Wharf street, Quincy Point, today, which was caused by spontaneous combustion, resulted in $1000 damage.

A night watchman discovered the blaze when one of the hoists caught fire.

Mandatory Deportation

THE infiltration of alien-minded ideas in our national government is naturally followed by a lax attitude in regard to criminal aliens.

So far has this laxity gone that James E. Van Zandt, national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, has charged that Secretary of Labor Perkins and the heads of the Senate and House immigration committees are controlled by "alien interests."

Mr. Van Zandt says of the members of these two committees:

"Not one of them has a record of favoring any measure really safeguarding Americans by substantially limiting the entry of foreigners and they have done all in their power to promote measures that would weaken the immigration laws.

"THEY ARE IDENTIFIED BY THEIR ACTION WITH ALIEN INTERESTS."

The remedy for this lies in the hands of Congress.

DEPORTATION SHOULD BE MADE MANDATORY.

Discretion should be taken OUT OF THE HANDS OF THE SECRETARY OF LABOR.

This can be done by amending the pending Kerr bill.

We have all we can do to contend with the native breed of pink-nosed Communists that is rife in our governmental structure at present.

Shut the door to the foreign product by putting ALL FOREIGN COMMUNISTS ON A LEVEL WITH THE CRIMINALS WHICH THEY ACTUALLY ARE.

Deport to their shirt-tail native lands, all alien criminals and all advocates of criminal and treasonable activities.

That is good American direct action.

Alibi in Doctor Slaying Under Fire

New York, Nov. 19 (INS)—Police planned today to call upon a lovely blonde member of a prominent Westchester family and demand that she explain a gap of seven minutes in the alibi she offered from her movements the night before Vera Stretz sent four death-laden bullets into the body of Dr. Fritz Gebhardt.

A blonde was believed to have accompanied Dr. Gebhardt to a midtown hotel a week ago last Sunday. The young woman questioned was unable to account for seven minutes of her time on the night before Dr. Gebhardt's murder in his fashionable mid-town apartment.

In spite of the torturous turns their probe has been taking the police are convinced that if they find the "mysterious blonde" they will be well along the road to a complete solution of the murder—a solution which Vera Stretz herself persistently declines to provide.

The police still believe it was jealousy over this blonde that led Miss Stretz to shoot the German industrialist.

Meanwhile, detectives were investigating a clue found in a letter written by Dr. Gebhardt from Toronto last June 28. It seemed to indicate the one-time member of Baron Von Richtofen's famous "Flying Circus" had been the object of threats.

Written from Toronto and addressed to "Verlaine," Gebhardt's pet name for Miss Stretz, the letter said:

"Have you heard from your father? I am very sorry about his accident. In spite of threats, I am not afraid to see him."

SAIL AND FAREWELL

Famous Iron Ship on Last Voyage

Bath, Me., Nov. 19 (AP)—The iron bark Coriolanus, proud mistress of the seven seas for more than half a century, is being prepared for her last voyage.

No precious cargo will fill her holds this trip out. No billowing sails will speed her on her way. No far-off port will be her destination.

She will be bound—at a tow rope's end—for a ship breaker's yard at Fall River, Mass.

Her graceful lines once won the gold medal of the Honorable Shipwrights' Guild of London for the Dumbarton, Scotland, shipwrights who fashioned her in 1876. In her youth she once equalled the clipper ship time of 69 days for the London-Calcutta run.

The flags of six nations have fluttered at her masthead.

She was a full-rigged ship when she flew the British Jack. She acquired the more economical bark rig in 1904, after her registry was changed to Norwegian.

Later she sailed beneath the flags of Germany, Portugal, Panama and the United States.

Several years ago she was brought to Bath to be refitted for service between New Bedford, Mass., and the Cape Verde Islands. The scheme never materialized, and she has been tied up since.

She has but a few days now to live in the reflected glory of the past. Then, for the last time, she will feel the surge of the open ocean—at the end of a tow line.

RACE FOES SEEK AID

West of State Sets 50,000 Goal

Spurred by a petition already filed with 20,000 signatures, leaders in the western part of the state today set 50,000 names as their goal for a similar petition calling for a referendum to eliminate horse and dog racing in Massachusetts.

Filing of a petition yesterday, sponsored by 10 original signers from Revere and East Boston, definitely put the pari-mutuel question before the 1936 Legislature.

The Legislature must pass on the petition, and if acted on favorably it becomes law. If it fails to enact the legislation sought, the promoters may file 5000 additional signatures and put the question before the voters at the state election next fall.

Rev. John Shade, of Weston, leader of another petition in the western section of the state, on learning of the filed papers, declared that his organization would now seek 50,000 signatures to be filed before December 2, the closing date for presenting petitions.

ASSASSIN TRIAL LAWYER OUT

Aix-en-Provence, France, Nov. 19 (AP)—Georges Desbons, engaged by American money to defend three Croats charged with complicity in the assassination of King Alexander of Yugoslavia, today was disbarred by the trial court.

He was escorted from the courtroom by gendarmes after he had attacked the justice's treatment of his motions and called the prosecutor a liar.

The defendants spurned the services of Jacques Saudino, a substitute lawyer appointed by the court.

"Nobody but Desbons," asserted their spokesman. "Our American brothers chose Desbons because they knew he alone was capable of getting us justice."

FACTS

Washington, Nov. 19 (US)—Franklin D. Roosevelt as candidate for President in 1932 said in a speech at Sioux City, Iowa:

"We are not getting an adequate return for the money we are spending in Washington, or to put it the other way round, we are spending altogether too much money for government services which are neither practical nor necessary. We need a simplification of what the federal government is giving the people."

The last federal budget was 8529 millions of dollars, largest in peace-time history.

'GANSETT FLYER TIP AWARDED $25 PRIZE

Fifty more dollars awarded to News tip winners this week.

The 'Gansett Flyer killed two men.

That was news, and there were many eye-witnesses.

But the first person to call the story into the Boston Evening American received credit for this week's top newstip award in the American-Advertiser contest and is therefore $25 richer for his alertness.

He asked us to withhold his name.

The second prize of $10 was divided this week between two young women, both with interesting tales to tell. Each gets $5.

AGAWAM TIP WINS

One, who prefers to remain anonymous, gave us a lead on the creditor's meeting of the Agawam Racing and Breeding Association at the Parker House.

The other, who's name is also withheld, gave us the exclusive story on the young woman in Dennis who broke into a former suitor's house, and was bailed to court about it.

Fifteen persons win $1 each for newstips this week.

They are:

Albert E. Hughes, of Union square, Somerville, who phoned in a story about a truck which exploded in the square outside his office window.

Simond Levinsky, Seaver street, Roxbury, who gave us a story that came out of a meeting of the accident board at the State House.

Name withheld, for story about Jamaica Plain relative of a Brooklyn, N. Y., bishop elevated to the post of cardinal.

James Smith, Endicott avenue, Revere, tip on a hold up.

Albert Vansani, Harley court, Cambridge, for tip on a man who fell four stories through a meat-packing house elevator shaft.

Name withheld, for a motorcycle accident in which a man was seriously injured.

Robert Hiller of Reading street, Roxbury, for story about a fire in a Roxbury home in which one person was badly burned.

PHONE NEWS SPEEDILY

Name withheld, for story about the raid on a shop in Olympia square, Lynn.

Name withheld, for story on the injuries to George Ryan, Leo Numa's sparring partner.

Mrs. Mary Havad of Washington street, West End, for story about a man who lost his hand in a printing press.

S. Simon, Nightingale street, Dorchester, about a man who plunged from the window of a hotel.

Name withheld, for story about the disputed wedding of Danno O'Mahoney and Miss Barker.

Dennis Hogan, Train street, Dorchester, for story of a leap from a fire escape which he witnessed.

Fred Galbraith, Hancock street, Everett for story about a trolley crash in Everett.

Abraham Barnard, Village street Medway, for story about an automobile crash there in which a youth was killed and two others injured.

Obviously it takes no training as a reporter to qualify for one of the prizes totalling $50 which the Boston Evening American pays out each week.

Merely paste the telephone number—Liberty 4000—in your memory, and when you see something that looks like news, phone it in. And phone it in fast, for that $25 first prize looks good to others, too.

If the story is such that you don't want your name mentioned don't let that hold you back. We withhold names of tipsters when asked. Remember, Liberty 4000 and ask for News Tip Editor.

KENNEY ALIBI UNDER FIRE

The state rested its case today against Thomas J. Kenney, 32, of Park avenue, Cambridge, charged with kidnaping William Peters, 7, of Bradfield avenue, Roslindale, last July 16.

Frederick J. Hastings of Pearl terrace, Cambridge, the last government witness, testified that he went to Kenney's home that night to collect a debt and that Kenney did not arrive until shortly before midnight.

Special Officer David Roche of West Roxbury division had testified that Kenney told him he was home all that evening.

In Suffolk Superior Court yesterday the Roslindale boy told Judge John M. Gibbs and a jury that Kenney invited him to take a ride, and took him to Somerville, leaving him to sleep all night on the dirt floor of a cellar.

Miss Sylvia Mello, who lives above a store operated by Kenney, at Beacon and Museum streets, Somerville, testified she and Mrs. Kenney found the boy late the following afternoon.

PLAN BIG ARMY IN PHILIPPINES

Manila, P. I., Nov. 19 (INS)—A standing army of 19,000 officers and men and 500,000 reserves by the end of 10 years.

That was the plan announced today by Manuel Quezon, newly inaugurated president, as he discussed with reporters future policies of the Philippines.

President Quezon said he would make military training compulsory in the schools, starting with children of 10 years.

An allotment of $8,000,000 annually for 10 years, which is about 25 per cent of the total budget and twice the present outlay for constabulary consisting of 8000 men, will be sought for his new military plans.

"I consider adequate national defense the most important duty of this government now," he declared.

Maine Gun Victim Declared Suicide

Gray, Me., Nov. 19 (AP)—County officials decided today that Aaron D. Cobb, 34, a fish pedler, killed himself with a shotgun. A medical examiner reported Cobb a suicide.

After Cobb was shot and killed in his yard here last night, his wife arrived with deputy sheriffs she had asked to protect her from her husband's fury. Deputy Sheriff Maurice H. Davidson declared.

Davidson said Cobb's uncle, Cobb, 62, Mrs. Cobb's uncle, told him the younger Cobb took a shotgun from the garage, bent over it and the weapon was discharged.

SHY SUITOR'S REWARD

Wins Bride After 35 Years

San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 19 (AP)—Faint heart finally won fair lady—but it took 35 years.

Herman Hermansen, 78, shy but constant lover, waited that long before he mustered courage to pop the question—by mail.

In 1900, Fredericka Friedman capriciously told Hermansen, "I'll never marry."

Too timid to try to change her mind, Hermansen saw a more aggressive suitor win her. He remained a bachelor. Eight years ago Fredericka's husband died.

Finally, two weeks ago, Hermansen grew bold—

He wrote a letter asking her, now 72, to marry him.

"This is very sudden," she replied, "but yes."

LAWRENCE AND MALDEN VOTE FOR MAYORS

Voting Hours

Malden . . . . 8 a. m. to 8 p. m.
Lawrence . . 8 a. m. to 4 p. m.
Beverly . . . 8 a. m. to 4 p. m.

Voters in Malden and Lawrence were balloting today to choose candidates for mayor and other municipal offices in non-partisan primaries.

In Beverly primaries the contests were limited to nominations for aldermen-at-large and ward aldermen.

Fair weather and a rising temperature were bringing out a fair vote in Malden and Beverly.

At Lawrence, however, despite icy street conditions and a nippy atmosphere, the balloting was heavy in the early hours, indicating that a record for a local primary might be set up.

5 FIGHT DEVIR

In both Malden and Lawrence, the mayors engage in the preliminary contest to retain their offices. Mayor John D. Devir seeks another term in Malden while in Lawrence Mayor Walter A. Griffin is fighting six candidates for nomination to a second two-year term.

Malden has five other candidates to furnish Mayor Devir with one of the hardest contests of his career.

They are Assistant District Attorney Edward J. Bushell, Alderman Soren Willesen, Clarence S. Doane, Frank E. Simpson and James Coyne.

Malden voters are also to nominate two of four candidates for places on the school committee; two nominees for alderman in three wards and common councilmen in six of the seven wards.

ICE TIES UP BALLOTING

Mayor Griffin's opponents in Lawrence include Robert F. Hancock, Richard A. Doyle, former Mayor William P. White, Daniel W. McCarthy, Joseph D'Urso and Anthony L. Misserville.

Nominees for school committee and aldermanic posts also are to be chosen.

Traffic in Lawrence was tied up in the vicinity of several polling places in the early hours of the balloting when campaigners' cars, carrying voters, became jammed because of icy streets and stalled motors.

Later the sun's rays had removed the ice and congestion was reduced.

With the Lawrence polls closing at 6 p. m., results were expected to be known about two hours later.

Leaps Saves 2 Men In Providence Fire

Providence, Nov. 19—Two lodgers, trapped by flames in a North Main street rooming house, leaped for their lives today from second story windows as 12 other occupants of the three-story building fled to the street.

James J. Riley, 24, suffered severe burns in his plunge, but the plunge of James Southall, 26, was broken by two policemen who locked arms in a "cradle" in an attempt to catch him.

LAWRENCE JOHN F. DOWD MALDEN VOTE CANDIDATE FOR MAYOR

City Councillor John F. Dowd of Ward 8, Roxbury, will be a candidate for mayor of Boston in 1937.

This was revealed at City Hall today by members of the Dowd organization. Dowd himself stated he was not prepared to discuss the matter at present.

Dowd is the second in the field, ex-Mayor Malcolm E. Nichols having announced his candidacy to the Boston Evening American early this month.

Intense organization work will begin immediately by the Dowd forces. "Dowd-for-Mayor" clubs will be organized in each of the Roxbury wards within a few weeks and later in other wards.

Dowd, one of the most aggressive younger men in the Boston political arena and a veteran of 10 years' service in the City Council, has been known as an independent in politics. Political observers estimate that he has a personal following of at least 60,000 voters.

He is a former president of the City Council.

He served as secretary to Governor Curley in his second administration as mayor of Boston. Last year he took an active part in the Curley primary and election campaigns.

COGNATO GAINS 30 LBS. IN JAIL

Anthony Cognato, having taken the stand himself, was the last witness for the defense in the first-degree murder case in which the 370-pound prisoner is charged with the slaying last March 6 of Jacob Cohen, insurance collector, in Chelsea.

Judge David F. Dillon in Suffolk Superior criminal court, overruled a motion for a directed verdict of not guilty. Attorney Herbert F. Callahan, defending Cognato, then rested his case.

Aside from the defendant, himself, who testified to his "hospital alibi" for the evening of the murder, the closing testimony for both government and defense was of little importance.

Assistant District Attorney James T. Cassidy began his summation for the commonwealth.

Cognato testified that when he was arrested by Chelsea police last March 9 for the Cohen slaying he weighed 340 pounds and now he now tips the beam at 370—a net gain of 30 pounds.

WELFARE COAL ORDERS BEING DISTRIBUTED

Whether due to protest of City Councillor Henry L. Selvitella, of East Boston or not, welfare recipients in that section were receiving orders for fuel today.

Selvitella, in a scathing statement, denounced welfare department officials for letting 100,000 adults and children in the city shiver.

John C. L. Dowling, welfare director, issued a statement, denying Selvitella's charges, and declaring that the fuel orders were being distributed.

PREVIOUS CUSTOM

Dowling claimed that the custom of previous years was being followed, and fuel orders had never been distributed before November 15.

It was further revealed by Dowling that not all the 22,000 welfare recipients are entitled to orders for coal and oil. Only those who need them in the opinion of the visitors are given the orders, he said.

At a meeting of the Welfare Board, it was decided to rescind the previous order stopping medical orders for 1500 mothers and recipients. The orders will be issued when an individual case demands them.

BITTERLY FLAYED

This point came under the bitter fire of several City Councillors at a recent meeting. The councillors demanded that the medicine be furnished those who need it, and that economy should not be practised on the poor.

Before the end of the week, Dowling said, all sections will be supplied with fuel deliveries, which will continue throughout the winter at specified times.

Auto Winner, Ticket Picker

MRS. MYRTLE BRACK MRS. ELOISE J. DENNESSEN

Called at random from an auto show crowd, Mrs. Myrtle Brack (wearing hat) of Donnybrook road, Brighton, drew from a big metal can a slip bearing the name of Mrs. Eloise J. Dennessen, 23, of Mansfield, who thereby became the winner of a brand new Hudson Terraplane, one of the cars given away nightly at the Mechanics building exhibit.

'36 AUTO PLATES BEING ISSUED

Distribution of 1936 automobile registration plates — white letters on maroon background—started today.

Boston's block of numbers run from 58001 to 725000. Those who arrived early with low number plates in mind were disappointed.

Plates for holders of the first 100,000 numbers will be mailed out the latter part of the week. Plates for the holders of the first 10,000 were being sent in the mail today, a job that will be completed tomorrow.

Motorists living outside of Boston and who register their cars at the branch registry stations will receive lower numbers than have been assigned to Boston.

Shocks Absorbed In New Plymouth

The bumpety-bump, that you feel when riding in the rear seat of an automobile, has been eliminated in the new 1936 Plymouths, now on display at the Auto Show, according to S. W. Monroe, New England Regional manager of the Chrysler Sales Corporation.

Thick rubber pads, set between the body and frames, absorb the shocks, giving smoother and quieter co-operation. Rubber is also used to muffle the engine noises and vibrations.

Engineers feel that this rubber blanket will help prevent drafts, dust and dirt from entering the 1936 body.

6-Story Fall Kills Woman

Washington, Nov. 19 (AP)—Mrs. Laura C. Stitt, about 50 and in poor health, plummeted to her death today from the sixth floor of an apartment house. She was married five months to Rear Admiral Edward Rhodes Stitt, retired.

Beacon Hill Yule Party Probed at Mythen Inquest

Continuing behind closed doors, the court inquest into the strange death of Bobby Mythen today gathered new details of a Christmas Eve party on Beacon Hill at the time he vanished.

Mythen, Winthrop high senior, was found drowned in Charles river 10 weeks after he disappeared on the Hill while following the carol singers.

Judge Francis J. Good is hearing evidence gathered by the state's reopened investigation seeking to solve the mystery.

The story of the party held in the home of a society man was begun yesterday and continued with the idea in mind that Mythen might, at some time during the night, have been among the guests, who included Harvard students.

PARTY DETAILS HIDDEN

No details of the party testimony were made known.

The story of the search for Mythen on Beacon Hill for the first time contained the name of his father, William J. Mythen, Budbury street merchant, as Sergeant Mark Madden related incidents of the hunt.

Mythen accompanied Special Officers Dennis Mahoney ar Walter Mckearon to Beacon Hill on several occasions before the body of his son was found, and before the search ended he expressed to police the fear his son was a victim of foul play or was being detained by someone.

MOTHER, SISTER AIDED

Mrs. Mythen and the victim's sister, Rose Mythen, were also active in the search.

Besides Sergeant Madden, witnesses heard at the morning session included Philip W. Wrent, Jr., Boston newspaperman, who testified yesterday; Leo Hughes of the Metropolitan district commission, who knew the river condition; Robert Cassidy, an uncle of Bobby; William G. Ball, a neighbor of the Mythens; Police Chief William F. Pumphret of Winthrop and Patrolman John Quinn of the Metropolitan force.

Still waiting to testify were Paul O'Leary, Jean Martell and Hyman Drukman, the Winthrop youths from whose company Mythen vanished. At least three other witnesses are to be summoned, it was learned, and among them may be society folk who conducted their own secret inquest into the mystery.

GORMAN GIRL DENIES HIT-RUN

Miss Frances Gorman, 21, of Gleason street, West Medford, charged with leaving the scene of an accident in which two Cambridge boys were seriously injured, pleaded not guilty in East Cambridge district court today.

Miss Gorman, who was accompanied to court by her mother, was permitted to go on her personal recognizance after the case was continued to November 26 by Judge Louis L. Green.

There were three charges against her, two of leaving the scene and one of driving to endanger. Her pleas of not guilty to all charges was made through her attorney, Philip A. Hendrick.

The two boys, Ralph Nixon, 17, of Hastings square, and Earl Thompson 18, of Westcott street, were injured on Memorial drive last Wednesday evening. Found at her home, Miss Gleason denied that she was the driver of the automobile.

The boys, who are at Cambridge City Hospital, were reported improving today but Nixon's name is still on the danger list.

SMITH URGES 'OATH' REPEAL

Northampton, Nov. 19 (AP)—Repeal of the Massachusetts teachers oath bill was demanded today by the Smith College chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

A resolution adopted last night and announced today asked all members of the teaching profession to demand such legislative action.

The resolution was signed by Otto F. Kraushaar, assistant professor of philosophy, as secretary of the chapter. It had been introduced by Mrs. Dorothy Douglas, assistant professor of economics and sociology.

Kraushaar said the resolution was adopted unanimously by 33 members of the chapter. The chapter has a membership of about a hundred, representing about half the faculty.

The victims were Pilot Verne Morton and Art Barney of Kearney, Mo., and Floyd Elsinghour of Wichita, Kan.

NOTED FOR BEAUTY

Ford V-8 Features Driving Ease

A car that is noted for its beauty and driving ease is the dream of every woman, in the opinion of T. J. Corcoran, assistant manager of the Ford Motor Company's New England division.

And such a car, he believes, is the new Ford V-8, now on exhibit at the Auto Show, Mechanics Building.

The average woman wants a car that is the last word in style, that can be easily maneuvered in heavy traffic, and is simple to park in the uptown streets during the rush hour, he says.

A new steering gear has increased the maneuverability of the new V-8 by 25 per cent, while mechanical brakes, responsive to the lightest pressure, all steel bodies and safety glass are on all models.

$5000 Fire Laid To Cigarette

A carelessly tossed cigarette today was blamed for a two-alarm fire which swept stores in the block at 1072 Dorchester avenue, Dorchester, doing $5000 damage.

SALES AT SHOW TOP RECORD

Not even the severe northeast gale could diminish the heavy sales at the Auto Show, being held this week at Mechanics Building.

Mr. and Mrs. America have bought more cars in the last three days here than during the same period of the prosperity boom years, according to W. Sweet, president of the Boston Automobile Dealers' Association. He said:

"We are pleased beyond expectations with the crowds of enthusiastic people who attended the show thus far. Sales of cars in all price divisions have been recorded which has proved conclusively that the great New England public is new car minded.

"The change in the season of showing the 1936 models, combined with the feature of giving away a new 1936 automobile absolutely free each night, has caught the fancy of the crowds. With general improvement manifested in all businesses, the sales records of the 1936 automobile exhibition show indications of surpassing all others."

CAR BALANCE HELD NEED

A maximum of balance is the test of a good automobile, according to William E. Holler, vice-president and general sales manager of the Chevrolet Motor Company.

Every car has it: distinctive feature — speed, dependability, fast pickup, economy or beauty—and every purchaser looks for the car with the feature he likes best, in Holler's opinion. He said:

"Now suppose one make of a car that did not surpass all rivals in any one of these features was found to be a second or even third in all of them—that would be a whale of a good car. It seems to me, for it would have a maximum of 'balance.'

"Some people want spectacular pickup, which means a preponderance of power to weight. Some insist that their cars must do everything 'in high.' Thus they sacrifice fuel economy."

G. O. P. in Battle

Schuster Blast Irks Washburn

FULLER'S EXPECTED SURPRISE FAILS TO MATERIALIZE

By BERNARD J. DOHERTY

Caustic criticism of "royal purple" candidates by Governor's Councillor Winfield A. Schuster of Douglas today threatened to bring about a wide split within the state G. O. P.

Resentment against the plea of Schuster for candidates who can "appeal to the common classes," seen as a direct slap at Speaker Leverett Saltonstall, gubernatorial aspirant, at the Republican Club meeting in Hotel Statler, today became articulate.

Robert M. Washburn, standard bearer of the party for the senatorial nomination a year ago, accused Schuster of giving aid and comfort to the enemy and of coming from a "fat" manufacturing family himself.

"HE'S A TYCOON, TOO"

"Mr. Schuster," Washburn declared in a statement, "now breaks out with a new rash. He endorses Governor Curley. They say that Mr. Saltonstall should retire from the public service, that he is, in substance a social tycoon, that he cannot appeal to the working man.

"If this is so, why should not Mr. Schuster also get out? For the Schuster family for generations have been fat manufacturers in Worcester county, textile tycoons. Mr. Schuster ought to take a bath himself before he established his own Turkish bath."

In addition to the Schuster discord in the harmony plans of the P. O. P., it became known today that a group of big-wigs within the party were disappointed over the lack of a development which those "in the know" had expected to come to the surface.

FULLER WITHHOLDS FIRE

This expected event, which failed to come off, was an announcement that former Governor Alvan T. Fuller was in a receptive mood and would offer no objections to having his name go before the pre-primary convention for the Governorship nomination next June.

A significant remark, dropped by one of the "solid" men of the party councils at the end of the Republican session at the Statler, caused the cause of those near to prick up with interest.

The remark was this:

"I wonder how many of those now on the platform will be in the running when the real lineup takes place."

The impression given as that the present show was looked upon more as a preliminary to the appearance of the main bout.

Councillor Schuster was the last of the long list of candidates for nomination for Governor and United States Senator who had been invited by the Republican Club of Massachusetts to "show their wares."

Up to the appearance of Schuster, enthusiasm ran high as the various speakers flayed the national and state administrations and predicted victory for the party in the coming campaign.

In fact, Speaker Saltonstall, one of the four announced candidates for governor, had accepted the "royal purple" issue and announced his pride in coming from a family who had lived here many generations and served the state with distinction.

EYE ON GOVERNORSHIP

That Councillor Schuster had the governorship particularly in mind was evidenced from his remarks which were confined entirely to the contest for this office.

He urged his hearers not to be "lulled into a feeling of false security by reason of the Republican victories within the last few months."

Undeniably, he declared, the Republican party in Massachusetts is coming back and prospects for a 1936 victory are bright.

But to make sure of success, he emphasized, two things must be done. The first of these, he said, is to drive the "renegades and betrayers" out of the party forever and the second is "to nominate men as candidates who can successfully appeal to the great common classes—the workers, the women in the homes behind the stoves and white collar workers.

ATTACKS CURLEY

"It's a mistake to think that Governor James M. Curley can be easily disposed of," the youthful councillor declared. "On the contrary Governor Curley is shrewd, cunning and a past master of all the tricks of politics.

"He is building a vast political machine, it is for us to put a stop to the kind of government that is witnessed on Beacon Hill, by nominating men whose background cannot be attacked by this vicious demagogue.

"In my opinion the Republican party will forfeit its opportunity to win unless we nominate men who can appeal to the common classes," he reiterated. "Governor Curley can be defeated in 1936 if he has to campaign on his own record in office. His prayer and hope is that Le ill have for his opponent candidates who are wearers of the royal purple.

"In 1934 it was 'work and wages,' in 1936 it will be 'down with the wearers of the royal purple.' let us not a- Republicans ignore these facts."

AIDS SCHUSTER

Momentarily stunned, the big gathering recovered and gave the councillor a hearty round of applause, Schuster immediately after "stole the show" when the only outof state speaker, Congressman Hamilton Fish, Jr., of New York, prefaced his speech with a graceful compliment to the man from Douglas.

"I liked the speech of the young red head," the congressman declared, "when he said we must appeal to the workers. I wouldn't waste time talking to a business or professional man who if not back by this time, should have their heads examined."

Of the listed speakers, former State Treasurer John W. Haigis of Greenfield and former Governor's Councillor Mary M. Duff of New Bedford were the only ones unable to be present. Haigis is a candidate for governor and Duff has been mentioned as a possible candidate.

REVIEW RECORDS

Former Attorney-General Joseph E. Warner of Taunton and District Attorney Warren L. Bishop of Middlesex, the remaining openly announced gubernatorial aspirants, reviewed their own records within the party and appealed for support.

Other speakers were the two announced candidates for the United States senatorship nominations, Representative Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., of Beverly and James F. Cavanagh of Boston.

Senator Henry Parkman, Jr., of Boston and Mayor Sinclair Weeks of Newton, looked upon as prospective candidates for governor and senator, respectively, also were heard, as well as State Senator William H. McSweeney of Salem.

HITS RAW DEAL

Representative Lodge denounced the national administration for its unprecedented spending record, its broken promises, ignoring of the qualified to make way for the political place holder, flagrant injustice to the consumers in food price fixing, back breaking taxes, and sectional favoritism.

Any fair minded persons, he declared, must come to the conclusion that "at best our national policy is a set of contradictory theories strung together as a stout cord of shameless political patronage."

DAIRY AND FISH INTERESTS HERE FIGHT TREATY

Washington, Nov. 19 (INS)—With the administration today turning its attention onward he conclusion of another reciprocal trade treaty with the Netherlands, four industries voiced their bitter opposition o the trade treaty concluded with Canada.

Leaders of the lumber, dairy cattle and whiskey interests were quick to denounce the treaty lowering of American tariffs on these commodities.

This newest of the Roosevelt administration trade agreements was generally regarded as likely to become an issue in the 1936 campaign.

Throughout the country business leaders, farmers and consumers studied the pact which lowers tariff barriers between America and her northern neighbor in some cases as much as 50 per cent.

Administration officials termed it one of their most notable accomplishments. They said it means the return of the billion dollar annual exports to Canada. In recent years these fell below $300,000,000.

LUMBER PROTESTS

Most bitter opposition was voiced by the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association, which said the pact is "paralyzing to the general economy of important parts of the country."

Lumber tariffs were cut in half by the treaty, with limitations on Douglas fir and Western hemlock to 250,000,000 board feet.

American whiskey makers declared the tariff threatens the domestic industry through the reduction in duty from $5 to $2.50 per gallon on imported whiskey. This applies not only to Canadian whiskey but Irish and Scotch whiskies as wall because of "most favored nation" clause applied to American trade with Ireland and Scotland.

Dairymen announced they would fight the reduction from seven to five cents in the American duty on cheddar cheese and the slash from 56.8 to 35 cents in the tariff on 1,500,000 gallons of cream each year.

Although Secretary of State Hull insisted the cream tariff reduction affected less than one per cent of domestic consumption, dairy interests declared this "entering wedge" would be sufficient to "break" the price in the New York and Boston markets.

Spokesmen for the salmon fisheries saw danger in the lowered tariffs on the West Coast, while New Englanders planned a fight on schedules reducing tariffs on Canadian fish competing in their areas.

With most administration leaders expressing private gratification over the treaty, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace predicted the pact would result in increased American exports, employment, and increased domestic consumption of American farm products.

The State Department is understood to be planning treaties with France, Spain and Switzerland, in addition to the Netherlands. A group of Dutch trade experts, who have been here for several weeks, talked with the President yesterday.

N. E. Expects Treaty to Aid New Rum Row

A "rum row" like that of Prohibition days will make its appearance off New England shores within a week, as a result of the reciprocal tariff agreement between the United States and Canada, according to predictions in official circles today.

It will be a temporary appearance, however, and will vanish after Christmas, even if the Coast Guards do not drive the ships away before then.

With the new year, the tariff on Canadian four-year-old whisky will be reduced from $1 on a fifth of a gallon to 50 cents.

This reduction will take the profit out of smuggling. In the brief period remaining before the change is made, all the ships that have been engaging in rum-running since repeal will concentrate in a drive to dispose of all the Canadian liquor they can.

The Thanksgiving and Christmas trade is another lure.

PEACE MARCH OF B. U. LAUDED

Lieutenant-Colonel William A. Ganoe, U. S. A., instructor of Boston University R. O. T. C., who made the recent students' peace mobilization a preparedness demonstration as well, received praise today from J. Howard Howson, professor of religion at Vassar.

Colonel Ganoe marched the B. U. cadets to the peace meeting on the Common and they carried a sign emphasizing that preparedness helps to ensure peace.

Professor Howson, who served in the World War as a lieutenant in the British infantry, wrote, in part:

"I want to thank you for your enlightened and statesmanlike attitude to the peace demonstration.

"I have seen enough of warfare to realize the necessity of a highly-trained nucleus on which the nation can draw in time of need.

"You have blazed a trail which I trust will become a well-paved road. I am glad to salute a real soldier."

75 GIRLS FLEE ROXBURY FIRE

Fire in the Capitol Laundry, Linden Park street, Roxbury, drove 75 girl employes to the street shortly after they had arrived for work today and threw the Roxbury Crossing section into an uproar.

Heavy morning traffic was tied up and a large crowd of workers thronged the street before the laundry.

Exit of the girl workers was orderly and no injuries were suffered.

Fire was confined to the first floor with an estimated damage of $1000.

An electric spark setting fire to clothes near the mangle machine was blamed for the blaze by fire officials.

Employes were allowed to reenter the building as soon as the blaze was extinguished.

Building is owned by Clarence Prendergast, of Henry street, Quincy.

Pact Hits Shoes, Textiles, Mrs. Rogers Declares

Washington, Nov. 19 (US)—The Canadian reciprocal tariff treaty was denounced today by Representative Edith Nourse Rogers (R.) of Massachusetts as holding "jokers" permitting "tremendous damage" to American industries, while favoring Japan and Czecho-Slovakia.

Mrs. Rogers especially attacked the 5 per cent tariff reduction this country yielded on cotton textile. She said:

"Under the 'most favored nation' policy of the state department, that 5 per cent reduction automatically applies also to Japan and Czecho-Slovakia. It means that nations with cheap labor and low living standards, nations already wiping out our great textile industry, are granted new favors."

Mrs. Rogers added:

"This treaty is a terrific blow to New England. The boot and shoe industry will suffer tremendously. In addition, machinery will be sent into Canada cheaply so that they can cut their own costs of textile production and add further unfair competition to us."

Betty Alden on 'Beacon Hill'

Private Showing of Portraits Attracts Fashionables

By BETTY ALDEN

"O H wad some power the giftie gie us, to see oursel's as ithers see us!" rhymed the immortal Bobbie Burns . . .and with that apt phrase summed up the essence of the personal vanity which all of us, man, woman and child, possess in greater or less degree . . .

In this day and age of box cameras and irrepressible amateur photographers it is not as difficult for us to get an idea of how we look to others as it used to be . . . For many years the privilege belonged only to the wealthy classes who could hire portrait painters to commit them to canvas . . . The same urge followed the era of the great masters of portrait painting and created the popularity of the miniatures and medallions so dear to the heart of the antique romanticist . . . Later came the silhouette cutter, then the daguerreotypist, and then the photographer . . .

NATALIE FOLSOM

Yet we find that those who can afford it still prefer to see themselves through the eyes of a talented artist, so, though the advent of the camera has made life more difficult for the mediocre painter, the modern masters of portraiture find ready market for their skill . . .

Sitters come to John Lavalle, not only because he ranks very high among contemporary portraitists, but because he is "to the manner born" . . . they come from the ranks of his many wealthy and socially prominent friends . . .

Yesterday afternoon many of these friends went to the Robert C. Vose Galleries to enjoy a cup of tea and to have the pleasure of seeing how "ithers see 'em" . . .

The occasion was a private view of some of Mr. Lavalle's latest works and not only were the subjects of the portraits invited, but many of their friends as well . . . Mr. and Mrs. Lavalle were there to warmly welcome each guest and Mr. and Mrs. Vose and their sons also cordially greeted every visitor . . .

Tailored Suit of Brown and Beige

ON ENTERING THE GALLERY one saw Natalie Folsom smiling down from the canvas, posed in a steel gray satin gown with a pert flame jacket, and on second glance one noticed Natalie in the flesh, sitting on the divan before her portrait, dressed in a black velveteen tunic with a black taffeta skirt . . . Natalie was surrounded by a bevy of her intimate friends who had come to admire her portrait . . .

Lily Warren in a rust velveteen tailored dress and hat . . . Emily Dick, blonde and tiny, wearing a black outfit with gray Persian lamb . . . Catherine and Cornelia Pentecost from Topsfield . . . Dorothy West in beet red silk dress and beret . . . Phyllis Forbes in a snappy tailored suit of brown and beige . . .

Like all accomplished portrait artists, Mr. Lavalle manages to incorporate in his paintings not only a likeness of the sitter, but also some telltale thing which gives us an inkling of the subject's life and interests . . . Very appropriately, Francis B. Crowninshield, whose ancestor, Benjamin Crowninshield, sailed Cleopatra's Barge, the first privately owned American yacht out of Marblehead harbor, is shown standing at the helm of his modern Cleopatra's Barge, with the waters of Marblehead harbor in the background . . . Clarion notes from the huntsman's horn which the artist has painted as tucked in the front of Josiah Child's coat of hunters green, have awakened the chilly echoes of many a crisp autumn . . .

Mrs. George Lyman, Jr., Attends

MRS. BASIL GAVIN stood beside her portrait to show Mr. Vose how much the painting really resembled her . . . The Lyman twins were also there . . . the flesh and blood Mrs. George Lyman, Jr., in a very real and modish outfit of bottle green velvet with a green metal cloth tunic, and the pensive Mrs. Lyman who looked down upon the gathering from a large gold frame . . . She is the former Eleanor Higginson . . .

Others at the tea were Mrs. Ralph W. Gray, Mrs. Katharine S. Choate, Betsy Byron, Mrs. Herbert Branwell Shaw, Mrs. Arthur Richmond with her little daughter Rosita, Mr. and Mrs. Henry G. Nickerson, Mrs. William C. Cox, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Devens, Mrs. S. V. R. Crosby, Frances McElwain, Mrs. H. I. Bixby, with Mrs. W. C. Thompson, Charlotte Sherburne, Katharine Townsend with her brand new fiance, Dr. Warren R. Sisson; Thalia Jenkins, Ruth Coffin, who is teaching at Beaver this year; Nancy Faxon with her mother, Mrs. Huntington Faxon; Betty Reece, Nancy Byron, Kitty Talbot, with her mother, Mrs. Max Talbot; Faith Barney, Mrs. Charles Gaston Smith, Philip S. Sears, Mrs. Dunbar Lockwood, Mrs. Harcourt Amory, and two dashing young debs in Russian style coats belted tightly and flaring at the hem, with turbans to match, Betty Prescott and Jane Matthews . . .

Mr. and Mrs. Heywood Fox are coming on to spend the week-end with Mrs. Fox's parents, the Channing Wells . . . They will attend the game together and the Wells may return to New York with them on the first leg of their winter trip to the West Coast . . .

SHAW, chairman of the committee on entries of the 110th Cavalry Horse Show to be held at the Commonwealth Armory for four days beginning December 5, left today for Toronto, Ontario, where he is to judge harness horses and ponies at the Royal Winter Fair Horse Show from November 20, until November 28 . . .

Mr. Victor Loew of New York will serve with Mr. Shaw as co-judge . . . Toronto's annual horse show is comparable to the National Show held in New York's Madison Square Garden last week.

Aristos Club Plans Bridge

A miniature diploma is the unique way of announcing the fashion show and bridge the Aristos Club is having Thursday evening at the Hotel Puritan.

The entire evening's going to be different . . . there's a show of sport clothes for active and spectator wear . . . Ruth Watson is giving a talk on the art of riding and Dorothy Whipple Fry is discussing the art of make-up.

Beauty Without Tears

is it a path of tears your path to beauty?
is it littered with boxes of powder that werent quite the right shade...
littered with lipsticks
made your lips coarse... littered with jars of cream that did exactly nothing for your skin?

one has to experiment but it is rather silly to experiment quite so wildly and so expensively
it is rather unkind to subject your poor face to these violent experiments when elizabeth arden can tell
in the twinkling of an eye just what is right
oh so perfectly right
for your skin

it is rather silly to make your path to beauty as long as the roman road into a grand adventure

victory and triumph

MASS KILLINGS BY SOVIETS

Rulers Execute Aides To Hide Own Blunders

TERRORISTS PREY ON AMERICANS

Walter Niedballa was one of a group of 48 mechanics who, in 1933, were induced to go to Russia and to take all of their equipment and savings with them. All of them were especially trained at a Soviet-controlled school in Brooklyn, N. Y., for service in the Soviet.

Upon arrival in Russia, all were swindled out of their savings and equipment. One was murdered and another driven to suicide. Like most of the others, Niedballa has returned penniless to the United States.

Niedballa has prepared a series of articles showing precisely what happened to him and his 47 associates as victims of the "Soviet slave traffic." The first article appeared Sunday in the Boston Sunday Advertiser. The third article follows:

By WALTER NIEDBALLA

The atmosphere of terror made itself felt at the Alexandrovsk state farm from the beginning. Our model grain factory had been advertised as a shining example of Stalin's agrarian revolution. But it yielded no grain!

When our American party arrived at the farm, we learned quickly of the "purge" which had preceded us. The iron hand of Moscow had descended upon the administration of the Alexandrovsk "Sovkhoz."

Walter Niedballa

All of the high officials were arrested on a charge of sabotage.

Twenty-six of the imprisoned farm officials had been shot. The only one to escape with his life was the former director of the "Sovkhoz," Comrade Frankel.

It was the consensus of local opinion he should have been the first to be executed. Instead, he was promoted to a high-er post.

This mass slaughter pervaded the air at Alexandrovsk. We learned that periodically the red tape of the dictatorship resulted in chaos for which the dictators always found scapegoats to deliver to the firing squad.

In this atmosphere we began our labors to build a new life. The spring sowing was on. Our men were eager to show results. But the obstacles in our path multiplied at a fantastic rate.

The tractors and the other machinery were in poor condition. We had paid for large quantities of American tools that were to be shipped to Alexandrovsk. But for some reason none arrived.

Our party had brought from the United States enough of our own vegetable seeds to provide the entire community with vegetables.

It was getting late in the spring. When I urged Wilga, our Communist leader, to start sowing, he remarked I had better keep quiet about our store of seeds.

"If Moscow learns of it, they'll confiscate the shipment and use it elsewhere," he said, to my surprise.

Engineers at Mercy of Terrorist Band

He and the other members of the Communist "nucleus" of seven appeared in their true colors only when we arrived on the land in Soviet Russia.

We discovered we were at their mercy, as their authority was unquestioned, their methods high-handed, their terrorism equaled only by their incompetence and corruption.

Our men complained and began to mutter demands for an accounting of all the funds we had contributed. At a general meeting of our group I forced the appointment of a committee to examine the books and to find out what had happened to our funds.

But no one seemed to want to serve on the committee, for fear of our Communist masters.

Thanks to the support of Mr. Zuchowsky, now back in Brooklyn with his wife and son after some harrowing experience, at the Alexandrovsk State Farm, the committee was appointed.

We examined the books, which had been inspected by a New York public accountant who was a member of the Communist party.

Their Funds Used for Red Propaganda

We found that all the Communist publications in New York had received large sums from our fund in settlement of advertising and propaganda bills.

We discovered that thousands of dollars were unaccounted for.

When we demanded a complete statement from our Communist leaders, they warned us in unmistakable language not to pursue the matter further.

More dismaying than the loss of our money, the lack of our tools, the inability to use our seeds, the starvation rations doled out to us, was the dismay caused by the loss of faith in the Soviet fairyland.

We went to Soviet Russia on the wings of enthusiasm for the new freedom of Communism.

We were caught in an immense spider-web, which paralyzed our wills, dried up our muscles, and bade us starve abjectly on a soil which carried plenty beneath its desolate surface.

TUGWELL PLANS 'SOVIET FARM' FOR U. S.

Washington, Nov. 19 (US)—Professor Rexford G. Tugwell, resettlement administrator, is planning a rural collectivist community patterned along lines of a Soviet state farm, it became known today.

At Ak-Sarsves village, Nebraska, 18 miles southwest of Omaha, farm steaders from the relief rolls will be colonized on an 800-acre tract to tend a community-owned dairy herd, grazing on communal pastures, the produce to be marketed by a community corporation under federal supervision.

Tugwell's aides today described the experiment as "co-operative rather than Communistic." They pointed out each farmsteader will own his own $2800 home, tool shed and chicken house, and the one-acre plot on which the buildings stand.

Garden produce and eggs will be consumed largely in the community, but gardens will be tilled with community owned tools and the surplus produce marketed through the community corporation.

Daily wages will be paid for work on the collective acreage, expected to comprise one-third of the total. Corporation dividends will be distributed yearly to the co-operative stockholders.

Resettlement officials said if the scheme proves workable and does not provoke too much criticism, other farmsteads inherited from FERA may be altered to conform to the "co-operative" pattern.

Free Motorists Marooned by Snow

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Nov. 19 (AP)—Hundreds of motorists, marooned on nearby mountains by raging snowstorms, were back home today and workmen cleared highways of huge drifts to bring aid to stil-disabled cars.

The storm blanketed a large part of northeastern Pennsylvania with 10 to 20 inches of snow. Buses were stalled and wayside inns and tourist stations are crowded. Many spent all Sunday night on the roads unable to drive through.

Fruits With Meats

By MARTHA LEE

When serving fruits with meats, do not limit the choices to ham with pineapple, and pork with apple sauce. Serve any of your favorite fruits with your favorite meats.

Place a half an apricot on top of the slice of pineapple occasionally when broiling, and top this with a bright red cranberry or cherry.

Instead of applesauce, try spiced apples occasionally, made by simmering the slices of fruit in a syrup of two cups of sugar and one cup of vinegar and a teaspoon of whole cloves.

Whole apples, cooked in a syrup of sugar and water and cinnamon berries make a lovely color note for a platter, as do pears cooked in a mint-flavored syrup, colored a delicate green.

SERVE WITH PORK

Serve these with pork or lamb roasts. Try serving a slice of broiled pineapple with liver and bacon, and see what dash is added to the meal by this simple method. If pan-broiling the liver and bacon, sauté the pineapple in a little of the bacon fat until it is a deep rich brown.

BROILED PORK SAUSAGES AND PEACHES

1 lb. pork sausages, links or patties
1 No. 2½-can peach halves
2 tbsps. butter
Parsley.

Prick the casings of each sausage with a fork. Place links on the rack of the broiler. On the same broiler place drained halves of canned peaches, cut-side up. Place a little of the butter in each peach cavity. Set the broiler rack four inches under a moderately high broiler heat and let the meat and fruit broil for 10-12 minutes. Turn the sausages once to secure an even brown. Peaches are removed when the edges are browned. Serve sausages heaped on a hot platter, surrounded by the broiled peaches and garnished with parsley.

Sherman Sentence Delayed to Spring

Worcester, Nov. 19—Newell P. Sherman, the Sutton choir-singer who was convicted of drowning his wife in Lake Singletary, will not be sentenced until late next spring, according to present indications, officials said today.

Sherman was found guilty of first degree murder and will be sentenced to death in the electric chair, if the Supreme Court rejects his appeal.

Superior Court attaches are now engaged in indexing the transcript of the evidence and preparing a summary, which task, it was said today, will take several weeks more.

When this is finished, the defense will file its bill of exceptions and the case will go up to the highest court, after new trial hearings before Judge Thomas J. Hammond.

PRISONER OF OGPU

By GEORGE KITCHEN

CHAPTER 54

Kogan's appointment to the high post coincided with the birth of grandiose plans for new construction in the North. It was decided to begin building the railroad from Katlas to Kem, which had long been under consideration.

This new project caused the railroad line already under construction by our camp to lose all importance.

True to form, the Soviet government started on a new enterprise before finishing the old. In connection with the new project it was decided to enlarge our camp greatly, bring the number of prisoners to a hundred thousand, transfer the administration to Kotlas, and recommence the existence of timber in the Uftug and Archangel districts.

It was easy to order the large number of prisoners working in the administration to be transferred to Kotlas, but it was a different matter to find housing for them.

But the OGPU does not boast in vain that it knows no obstacles. The main thing was the decision, the details would take care of themselves.

The architect with whom I had spent my first days in Kotlas was urgently called to Ust-Syssolsk. He was ordered to Kotlas at once by a river boat, and while en route he was to make a rough draft for construction of a settlement to house three hundred administration workers.

A thousand prisoners of his own choosing were placed at his disposal. He was ordered to work day and night and to finish the ten buildings by the first of November. Tools and materials were to be furnished him promptly.

Nothing could daunt the architect. He readily guaranteed completion on time, but not the quality of construction. However, nobody was interested in the latter and he went ahead full speed immediately upon receipt of his instructions.

Visions Escape

All the local organizations were ordered by the district OGPU to place all available building materials at his disposal.

High-handed tactics were used to secure the necessary timber. Detachments of guards stopped the rafts of timber en route to Archangel and groups of prisoners rolled them ashore and brought them to the building site.

These timber rafts belonged to "Severolies," but all the protests of the latter were of no avail. The OGPU was too strong.

Building materials going to the autonomous territory of Komi via Kotlas were held up and unceremoniously diverted to the building site.

Good progress was made and by the end of October the main buildings were ready for occupancy.

The administration started to move to Kotlas. One man from each department was to stay at Ust-Syssolsk and finish the business on hand. The choice in my department fell upon me.

I was loath to remain, for I wished to get back to Kotlas as quickly as possible, since it was from there that I hoped to carry out my plans for escape.

As luck would have it, there was a shortage of brick and boards at Kotlas. I received a telegram:

"Urgent. Ship immediately all brick remaining from railroad construction. Buy and ship minimum two hundred standards of sawn timber."

It was easier to write such a telegram than to execute it. There were about one hundred and fifty thousand bricks at the railroad, but they were stored three kilometers from town, the roads were softened by the rains, and a horse could haul not more than seventy-five bricks per load.

All the horses of the penal camp were busy on earthwork construction, which could not be stopped. But the telegrams came thick and fast—the brick was urgently needed and all hopes were centered on me.

I had to use a well-known trick and entice teamsters away from their work for other Soviet organizations. To do this I offered a bonus of a package of tobacco for each load hauled.

The announcement of the bonus spread like wildfire and the next morning bricks were being hauled to the pier at full speed. Then came the problem of transportation, as the local office of state navigation refused to furnish barges.

I used Bukhaltzev's method and generously distributed some luxury goods such as cigarettes, preserves, chocolate and tea. Instantly some barges were found and brought to the pier.

Tobacco bonuses were also used for the loading of brick, and similar tactics helped in the purchase and loading of sawn timber.

Finally all the brick and half the timber were loaded and ready to leave. But suddenly a change of weather set in; it turned very cold and in the morning we found the river frozen and the closing of navigation was officially announced.

The tugs were taken to the docks and were guarded to prevent us from ordering them out in spite of the ice. Our barges remained at the pier.

It was quite aware of the danger confronting me. If the barges remained there for the winter, I faced dire consequences.

I had many chekist well-wishers such as Bukhaltzev, and an ally would be easy for them to portray this occurrence in a light that would make it appear I had intentionally planned it.

I could be accused of sabotage and "wrecking" could be aroused again, and sentenced to the usual punishment meted out for such crimes.

My only chance was for warm weather which would melt the ice. So I found myself in anxious expectation. The ice was getting firmer.

During these two days I received an untold number of telegrams and was constantly called to the office of Shkele, the assistant commander of the camps, who had remained at Ust-Syssolsk. The conversation was always the same:

"Well, how about the river?"

"It is still frozen."

"And the brick and the timber?"

"Awaiting shipment."

"When are you going to ship them?"

"As soon as the ice thaws."

"What makes you think that it will thaw?"

"It is bound to thaw."

"But why is it bound to?"

"Because it must."

"All right. You may go."

Blind Trust

I would leave, only to be found within the hour by an urgent messenger who demanded that I come to the chief's office at once. Then the same conversation was repeated.

Under the influence of the continual radio messages from Kotlas, Shkele's tone of voice abruptly changed toward the end of the second day.

True chekist that he was, he was already looking for the goat on whom to pin the guilt, and the thought was ripening in his head that the blame for the ill-fated shipment could be heaped upon my shoulders.

"How about the river?" he kept asking, now with anger and a hidden threat in his voice.

I knew that if the cold weather persisted I was lost. Everybody was excited and demanded that the barges be unloaded immediately, but I stubbornly insisted on patience and I won.

In the evening of the second day the atmosphere at the office was so tense that I asked for a last respite until morning, assuring everybody that the barges would leave at sunrise.

My assurance was not entirely due to a blind trust in luck. I had a strong pain in my injured knee and this to me was a sign of a definite change in the weather.

On my way back from the bathhouse to the barracks I was delighted to note that my barometer had not deceived me. A warm wind was blowing in my face.

In the morning rain and wind helped to break up the ice and our barges left triumphantly.

Now I was impatiently waiting for orders to leave for Kotlas, but they did not come. I had no more work and not wanting to spend my time in the barracks, I wandered about town and the cemetery, where the priest daily said morning mass in an empty church.

He stood himself quite alone and sang the service in a beautiful, inspired voice which resounded clear as a bell from the listening walls.

In the perfect silence of the temple his voice rolled and lulled, then grew again, filling the church with reverberations and penetrating the innermost recesses of the soul. I closed my eyes and gave myself up wholly to the charm of it, forgetting for a moment that I was a prisoner.

The telegram calling me to Kotlas came two hours before the departure of the season's last steamer, I left Ust-Syssolsk hoping never to see it again.

The journey was as melancholy as the clouded sky. On the second evening the lights of Kotlas greeted me in the darkness and at ten o'clock I entered the building of the EKO office, where our supply department made its headquarters.

ADVICE on LOVE and MARRIAGE by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Which Is Marriage Asset—Charm or Cooking?

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

IT'S ALMOST impossible to pick up a magazine these days without reading an advertisement for instructions in CHARM. Ten class lessons at so much, individual instructions at a higher rate.

And I understand these charm classes are crowded—with women.

But men don't worry about charm. In fact they don't give a darn whether they have or have not charm. They know perfectly well they'll never lack for dates, even if they're an rough as bark on a tree, or as uninteresting as a dish of spinach.

It's the girls who worry about charm. I spend money to acquire it. The consequence is that the country is cluttered up with girls who go about exuding charm, scattering smiles and trying to please. They are pestered with rules about what and what not to do, while the masculine person who doesn't worry about these things goes on his way triumphant.

CHARM OR COOK?

The result of all this charm school stuff is that a lady has written to me and asked whether her daughter should be enrolled in a charm school, or should learn how to cook and keep house properly. The daughter and her mother, who disagree on this all-important question, decided to make me umpire, so the daughter tucked a letter in her mother's envelope, saying:

"Suppose I learn all about autumn house cleaning, how to shop at the chain stores, how to cover the worn parlor sofa with an attractive chintz; will that make a nice man fall in love with me? You know, Miss Fairfax, that it won't."

The mother is all for her daughter being a practical housekeeper, although she leaves the question of the charm school open for discussion. You can see that she is a capable and conscientious mother, who believes that, if a marriage is to be a success, a young housewife must know her trade.

HOUSEHOLD ARTS

But the daughter argues that there is no use learning a trade unless you have an opportunity to practice it. Secure your opportunity first, she says, then capture your man.

The daughter believes in charm. Plenty of parties. Plenty of clothes. Plenty of attention to her face and hair at the beauty parlor. Plenty of gayety, so that she may appear to be the happy, carefree creature that all men demand.

There is something in what she says, undoubtedly, but it's my notion that a girl ought to make herself attractive and charming without giving 24 hours a day to it. Preparation for marriage should not omit the things in this young lady's list, but I do not agree that it should overlook competent housekeeping, the ability to get the most out of a dollar, and the knack of making a home the most attractive place in the world for a man to return to after his struggles in the dollar arena.

Cooking is one of the most fascinating arts. Running a household on a budget is a highly exciting form of arithmetic, and learning these important things may be combined so easily with a wholesome amount of charm pursuit that there need be no serious quarrel between this young lady and her mother.

Be as charming and attractive as possible, but preparation for marriage always should entail the exercise of common sense.

LEAVES HIS BRIDE AT HOME

Dear Miss Fairfax:

My husband has his own business, and has to be away from home looking after it a good part of the time. As he is his own boss, he could take me with him, and it seems queer that he doesn't do this, as we've only been married six months. He seems very devoted when we are together. I find it difficult to make friends, as we live in a hotel, and I know no people in this city.

LONESOME WIFE.

It seems that a bride of only six months might be taken now and then on a business trip. But, my dear, some men are like that—either from objection to the extra expense or because they feel they've provided a home and expect the wife to stay in it, they neglect to say: "Get your hat."

However, don't mope; try and make some friends. Join a club or go to some evening classes. In the city, from which you write, there are classes in art, music, dancing, dramatics or good old domestic science. They are free, in a world famous settlement house. Why not join one or two of them.

Mrs. Culbertson

An Expert at His Worst

Average bridge players, grieving over their errors, should take heart, and comfort themselves with the thought that even experts fall from grace lamentably often.

I recently watched an excellent player make a play so unusually bad that I almost gasped aloud.

Two seconds later, he begged his partner to shoot him, and for a moment it looked as though his wish would be granted.

There could have been no other explanation than his one muttered word. "Brainstorm!"

The hand was commonplace enough.

East	South	West	North
1 ♣	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

South led the heart King, followed by the Queen, East ruffing the second lead. Two rounds of trumps were played, ending in the dummy, and a diamond led up to the K. J. 10. North properly played the Ace and led another heart which declarer ruffed.

A small club was led up to dummy's Queen and South promptly "split his honors" playing the ten. After much thought, declarer allowed the ten to hold the trick.

South correctly returned a diamond which was won by East's Jack. The dummy was entered with a trump and the Queen of clubs led. North failed to cover!

This gave declarer a contract which could have been defeated one trick.

New Turbans

HINDU turbans will shield some of our most fashionable heads from the southern sun, and wrappy hooded capes will blossom on the beach as well as in the ballroom.

The beach cape of neutral monks' cloth, knee-length and complete with hood, is one of the favorite styles of the season, having a romantic look in both fabric and cut.

Sarongs will be seen in both swim suits and beach costumes, and there is a new color bound for success on Florida sands. It's called Hindu green, and has something of a sage tone.

The peasant note will be seen in Salzburg shorts and Tyrolean suspenders, Irish peasant capes worn with long stocking caps, and printed challis beach dresses in bright peasant colors.

Beeckman ON Good MANNERS

By MRS. BEECKMAN

NOT INCLUDED

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

If a man asks a woman to a wedding where he is going to "stand up," does that mean that his guest is also to "stand up" with him? If so, will you please tell me what I should do to find out how I am to dress, and so forth? Of course, there will be an invitation sent by the bride to me. READER.

The fact that a man is invited by the groom to be his attendant does not at all mean that the bride wishes to have a woman friend of this man as her attendant. The groom chooses his attendant and invites him, and the bride chooses her attendant and invites her.

WELCOME-HOME PARTY

1—Would it be appropriate to give a welcome home card party?

2—I would like to know how the invitations should be worded? C.

1—Yes, this would be a delightful and friendly thing to do.

2—Your notes of invitation might be worded something like this:

Dear Mary,

Tom and I are planning a little welcome-home bridge party for Sally and Walter, and we want very much to have you and Jack come. It is to be at our home on Friday, the first of December, and we'd love to have you come at about eight o'clock. Do say "yes," for I'm sure that we'll have a happy time welcoming back these two dear friends.

Dearest love.

Affectionately.

Fashion Flash

AMONG evening wraps, the most sumptuous is the full-length cape of swirled silver fox. Hooded ermine capes also are well in the spotlight, and white fox capes are up and coming.

Persian lamb, in black or gray, is the season's great success. Caracul, mink and broadtail are holding their own for dress coats. And the most popular sports furs are leopard, leopard cat, and Manchurian ermine.

Hollywood Reducing Baths

IF FOR some reason or another you can't be bothered with gymnastics or diet—yet earnestly desire the same slim, lithe figure as Gail Patrick possesses, by all means investigate the new Hollywood "blanket" baths. While a startling innovation to Boston, these baths are an old story in the movie colony, as they streamline the figure into the lovely proportions of youth with a very minimum of effort.

By ARLINE GOULD

IT MAKES no difference whether you are out-and-out fat or merely a few pounds overweight, what you need is one of the new Hollywood reducing baths.

If you really want to accomplish weight reduction without being exercised half to death, or dieted into a wraith, give yourself over to this new method and think no more about it.

Here is a safe way to keep both slim and fit and also acquire that vibrant, alive look of youth. It quickens the circulation of the blood, assures a healthy, youthful glow and melts away excess fat as by magic.

Scientifically built and constructed under the technically critical supervision of the Carnegie Institute of Technology, they are like nothing Boston has seen before. First of all you are wrapped in an electrically heated blanket and "baked."

Don't get the idea that this "blanket" is like a medieval instrument of torture. It isn't. In fact its a comfortable hand-loomed affair of chenille—both flexible and strong, and the last thing in the world you would expect to bring radiance, beauty and slimness on short order.

You'll feel a glow—as natural as the warmth of spring—soon envelop you from top to bottom.

At any rate the millions of pores—"one way streets"—are started functioning from the inside out. Excess fat is melted away, your system is purged of unseen poisons and that dull, let-down look is whisked away.

To learn the name of the downtown Boston shop where these baths may be taken, call Arline Gould, Liberty 4000, or write to her at the Boston Evening American, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

GRAY elbows with flesh coarse and goose-pimply are seen everywhere. Five minutes of attention every night for a week will put them in form again. Scrub well with soap suds and a brush, massage with coconnut oil, pat in some almond meal and apply hot fomentations. There you are! All in a minute.

WHEN BUYING a cream, keep in mind that the consistency is important. Thin ones that go on easily and are easily removed are compounded for the purpose of cleansing and protecting. The heavy emollient is a massage medium. It offers resistance to the finger tips, so that stroking, palming and patting are effective.

ARE you nice to your ears? Should be. Pretty little shells, they like attention. Powder them carefully, touch lobes with rouge. A natural blush includes the ears. Which reminds us that somebody has said that blushing is the only trick a woman can't learn.

Answers TO YOUR Beauty QUESTIONS

Question—I am 18 years of age and nearly five feet eight inches tall. Because I am rather thin, I am very self-conscious of my looks. I know that I do not carry myself very well and for this reason always manage to appear awkward. I have what you would call an "S"-shaped back. My chest is flat and my shoulders seem to droop.

Helen F. Mc., Dorchester.

Answer—Beautiful carriage and bodily grace make a woman distinguished no matter what her height. If you would walk in beauty, muscles must be resilient. That means exercise. Good posture is important. Unless the chest is lifted, the stomach held in, the backbone posed as it should be posed, there is bound to be awkwardness. There is really no excuse for anyone being awkward, because if you have your wits working you will be aware of the fact that you are clumsy and will find a way to create charm of gesture. My leaflet on back exercises will enable you to strengthen the muscles of your back and shoulders. It will also show you how to practice control of the abdominal muscles and how to adopt good bodily posture. Send a stamped, self-addressed envelope for this leaflet.

Train Your Own Waves

SOFT, SILKY, thin hair is likely to take too good a permanent wave. Yet if it doesn't get a decided crimp it goes limp, all is lost. After the first finger wave, don't use water; substitute brilliantine. Water is likely to destroy the wide lines, produce small corrugated ones.

The Job that a Telephone Saved

Eleanor Ryerson (a real girl, but a fictitious name) did part-time work in a laundry. When there was work, the laundry called—not Eleanor, whose family had no telephone—but the people next door, who would tell her.

One day something went wrong. The laundry telephoned, but Eleanor was not told. Whether the people forgot or were busy with their own affairs, nobody knew. But Eleanor lost two weeks' work.

That decided her. She couldn't afford to lose any jobs. So she ordered a telephone for herself. In a week the laundry called again. This time the summons came direct to Eleanor, and she went to work the next morning.

The job proved permanent, and she stayed on the payroll. Moreover, she was able to get a job for her sister in the same laundry within another week.

A Typical Case

Eleanor Ryerson's case is like a great many others of which we have definite knowledge. Some of these have been told to us by employment agencies, which frankly state that a person with a telephone has a better chance of getting a job than a person without one.

So, even with a limited budget, many people find a telephone a good investment when looking for a job.

For Telephone Information

You can order a telephone, or obtain information about telephone service, in any one of three ways: In Person — By Telephone — By Mail.

If you wish to call your telephone business office from a public telephone, the call is free. Just ask the operator for "Telephone Business Office", and your nickel will be returned to you.

SYNOPSIS

For four years Nell Doran and Richard Calhoun have been in love. Four years have they waited for the "break" which could bring about the fulfillment of their dreams of happiness—marriage. But three years out of college, Ricky has no job. Meantime, Ned Hamilton, junior partner of the firm which employs Nell, has entered the lists for her hand. Independence, a luxurious home, a husband to cherish her, all were hers if she would but say yes. It would be an escape from the terrible uncertainty of life and from the drab home dominated by her stepfather. But Nell holds to her faith in Ricky. One night, Ricky, discouraged, resolves that he cannot justifiably hold Nell any longer. He tells her that he will never see her again. Weeks pass and Nell hears no word from him. Her sister Emily, the family dodge, decides to leave home. The decision further clouds Nell's chances for happiness, for her need at home becomes doubly important. Hearing that Ricky is now seeing the flirtatious Vera Holmes, Nell makes a desperate decision.

CHAPTER NINE

Before the door of a dreary gray house in Fifty-eighth street, Nell Doran stopped in agitation.

Curtains flapped at the windows: the Ninth avenue overhead scuttled by. In the roar and confusion, the girl heard only the loud, frightened thump of her own heart.

It was three weeks since she had seen Ricky. Much could happen in that time. He might no longer care: he might not want her now.

The thought brought her to the verge of tears, but she went resolutely and rang the bell.

One look in Ricky's eyes, she would know instantly his emotion and his wish.

A fat woman with small inquisitive mouth and an unkempt face pulled open the door.

Mr. Richard Calhoun was at home. Upstairs—fourth door to the left. Certainly—go right up!

Nell gave a brief, hesitant rap and waited in the dark, narrow passage.

After an ominous moment, Richard bellowed: "Come in, can't you? Think I've a butler concealed in the closet?"

Gingerly, Nell opened the door. Ricky stood before a cracked mirror, intently shaving

He went right on, bringing the razor down in a neat path between the foamy lather.

Presently he said with increased sharpness: "What do you think this is, a circus? Drop them on the chair and beat it!"

Nell remained trembling on the threshold. Ricky's tuxedo was laid out on the bed. A big, ungainly brass bed

Some Other Girl

He was going out tonight. Some smart affair. He wasn't grieving for Nell: wasn't even missing her. He had some other girl. A new, carefree, exciting girl.

The dark, exotic face of Vera Holmes flashed upon Nell's mind, making her heavy and stupid with pain.

Ricky caught her reflection in the mirror. He stared at it fixedly. Then he grabbed a wet towel and mopped the lather from his face.

With one bound he was across the room, pulling her in and slamming the door.

"I thought you were the kid with clean towels," he said distantly, regarding her with startled gaze. "How did you get here?"

She looked up with tears brimming and tried unsuccessfully to form words with her lips.

They stood there, speechless, lost in each other's eyes. His were blue, flashing javeline. They went into her with fire and joy.

He held her helpless in this subtlest of all communion—the embrace of the eyes.

Abruptly he drew her to him. He pressed his damp, glistening, soapy face with a laugh hard against hers.

He kept on laughing—shaky, uncertain, desperate laughter: holding her tense in his young, strong arms. She reached a hand to his cheek, fingering it with ...

She said, trembling: "Ricky, kiss me!"

Ricky grinned back through a blur of joy: "We're a pair of fools."

"I'm glad!"

"Maybe you think I'm not!" She made a vague gesture to the tuxedo lying on the bed: "But you're going out. I shouldn't have come."

He answered quickly: "I had a date for tonight, but not now! Here, take this magazine and wait downstairs. I've got to get a shower."

Ten minutes later Nell heard him talking at the telephone in the hall. He was having a hard time. He was repeating excuses. He was growing impatient.

Finally he said a cold, hostile note: "I realize it's quite impossible for you to understand anything in the world but your own pleasure.

"I'm sorry to disappoint you. But this business is IMPORTANT! I can't neglect it much as I'd like to be dancing with you tonight."

There came a short pause. The girl at the other end must have softened.

She must have sued for some proof of his regret for Ricky answered: "Of course, I'll miss you, I'll phone tomorrow. Good-night, have a good time!"

"Let's Get Out"

He came swinging into the room, took Nell's arm and said brusquely: "Let's get out!"

They walked rapidly along Fifty-eighth toward the Hudson. Nell felt his arm stiff against hers.

She saw the harsh, determined, almost angry line of his profile and felt chilled

He said: "That was Vera Holmes on the phone. We met her at Ken Williams' dance. Girl with the black bangs and slinky. Remember?"

"I remember her. Perfectly!"

"She's asked me to a dozen parties. I've gone to a few. Some people in this town don't even guess there's a depression

"One night in the Rainbow room there were eight of us, Vera's birthday. The bill was $75. All the good things of life are free to Vera.

"They better continue free or what a squawk from those pampered darlings!"

Nell couldn't resist the temptation to pit herself against this lucky young princess.

She said in soft, winning tone: "But it must be fun going around like that. I'm sure I must have wanted to go with her tonight. Surely!"

He halted in their rapid walk. His eyes narrowed: "Do you want to be out with Ned Hamilton tonight? It must also be nice to have orchids and candy dumped daily in your lap!"

She flung a hurt, accusing glance in his face: "I haven't gone out with Ned Hamilton! That is, I only went once with him. And that was after weeks had passed an' you didn't bother about me

"You never even phoned! I knew there was someone else! I even heard about it. And it's I who have come to you. It's been I always who cares the most!"

Their beautiful mood was gone; the mood of joyous approach when they had come too tremblingly near.

The sweet, exalted moment was stained now and lost.

They walked along blindly—in harsh, wounded silence, stopping only at the water's edge.

They stared away from each other to the distant, misty-blue mountains where a crimson sun trailed rainbows of flashing color

Each moment the river changed Now it was pure silver against the black Jersey cliffs; a stream of lighted silver.

Now it turned to fire Roses bloomed on the water; great shimmering pink roses.

The girl thought: "It's so beautiful!" and longed to cry.

Heaven Smiles

He hand reached down. It closed on hers. He said, hunkily: "Nell, look!" and pointed to the sky, bonds of gleaming copper took form like birds.

The birds had wings of flame. They drifted onward with a faint music through the sky.

Ricky said, watching them and blinking: "You don't care the most, Nell!"

"But I couldn't stay away from you, Ricky!"

"And you think I could? I waited for you often. Had to look at you. Had to know if your eyes and your hair and your little white face were real. I almost hoped to find you changed.

"Each time I went near that office you were dashing off with him. You seemed to like it. You laughed and were happy. Then I went out with her. Three or four times."

They stood on the curving shore in the shadow of an old warehouse. The water lapped with gentle murmur against boats fastened to a pier.

Ricky slipped an arm about her waist. "Don't be so cold and angry about it, Nell.

"It was stupid in me. I was sore and jealous. Look at me, Nell. Please!"

"Nell, you're crying. Oh, please, don't!"

She gazed at his young, impetuous boy's mouth and into his tender, pleading eyes.

She said waveringly: "I'll cry all I like!" She thought he had a strong face: a clean, beautiful, exciting face. She spoke again, unevenly: "Ricky—you love me. You're so—so glorious!"

He pulled her to him with a hurried "Stop!" He held her in a long, trembling embrace, kissing her eyes and holding her lips hard against his

He said: "Nell, this seems right. You belong to me. I to you. I'm glad when you're around. Just being near you. It's the strangest thing. I want to laugh. I want to shout. I feel blazingly alive. There's no use fighting it. You're mine. You've got to be!"

Let's Get Married

"Then let's get married, Dick."

"What do you mean, Nell?"

"Just that. I've thought it all out. I've lain awake night after night. I can't give you up. I won't! Ricky, I want us to be married. Now! Any time—right away."

He repeated dazed: "Married? How can we? Things haven't changed."

"No, they haven't changed. It may be years before we'll have money enough and be free.

"We're going to lose each other if we wait. I love life. I think it's beautiful and precious even when it's hard. But I'd rather die than look forward to a future with you gone"

He took our his handkerchief and slowly wiped his forehead. He said brusquely: "Let's sit down." He took fine pebbles and strained them through his fingers.

"How can we work this out, Nell? God knows I want you. I'll take you on any terms. But I'd like to be in a position to look out for you.

"A little way. If we marry, all kinds of things can happen to get us down."

She said with icy resolution: "Only one terrible thing can happen—to lose each other. I'm game for anything but that."

"We can lose each other more viciously if marriage proves too hard. It won't be any bed of roses for us'

"It would take more courage than going into a trench. Have you thought of this, Nell?"

"Yes, I have! I've always known marriage didn't begin or end as a fairy tale. It's a testing: sometimes a terribly bitter testing.

"I've seen my mother and Henry Mason. She loves him to always, but it's all dragged in the mud. She couldn't keep it high. We can"

"Everyone thinks that, Nell."

"But we've had to work hard for every happiness. Always. We're schooled. We know that beauty is worth aching for.

"I'll go through fire for you, Rick, I'll scrub floors and sing at the top of my voice as long as you're glad I'm about."

"Nell, sweetheart, don't tempt me in this way. Kiss me and give me this hour, but don't let us go mad about it."

MADGE LEARNS OF PLANS FOR THE LOCK BOX

CHAPTER 502

WAS IT fancy, or did my sister-in-law's face change ever so slightly as I put my query concerning the progress in convalescence of Lee Chow and Hugh Grantland? I knew, of course, that it was not my inquiry concerning the Chinese which would arouse mental comment in her. But I wondered if my meticulous care to appear matter-of-fact in speaking of Hugh had not appeared a bit overdone?

Unless to speculate upon it now, however, Harriet was speaking, and there was no hint of anything beneath the surface of her words.

"Major Grantland is practically well," she said, "Of course, he carries his arm in a sling, and his shoulder still has to be dressed, but Edwin tells me that condition will not last much longer. In every other respect he is perfectly all right. Indeed, he is aiding very materially in the care of Lee Chow."

Lee Chow Dangerously Ill

"Who is not nearly well, I take it," I said as she paused.

She shook her head

"No, poor fellow," she said soberly. "He is having a pretty hard time, although that serum which you and Mrs. Underwood brought from Smithtown—the relay from the New York laboratory—has kept him alive and has greatly improved his condition. Incidentally, Mrs. Underwood told Edwin and me about that adventure. It probably was one of the contributing causes to your breakdown."

"Never mind that," I said. I am afraid, a bit brusquely. "But tell me, will Lee Chow be able to be present at the opening of the Lock box?"

"It will have to be opened at his bedside, Edwin says. He is straining every nerve to get Lee Chow into such shape that he can preside over the opening of the box, even if he can only sit up in bed, propped by pillows, for the briefest possible time. Edwin says that everything must be in readiness for the opening before Lee Chow is even notified that the time has come for the opening.

"Then Edwin, Katherine and Major Grantland will get him ready, and Edwin will give him a powerful stimulant to carry him through the thing. Edwin says that in ordinary circumstances he would not think of permitting a man as sick as Lee Chow to go through with such an ordeal. There is a chance, you know, that he may not survive it."

Matter of Life and Death

"Oh! No!" I cried in horror

"Oh! Yes," she returned emphatically. "But Lee Chow says it is a matter of life and death to him, and Major Grantland fears him out. So Edwin is doing the best thing in trying to conserve Lee Chow's strength and administer the right kind of stimulants to him."

With an apprehensive recollection of what Edwin himself had undergone, I put another hurried question.

"Edwin isn't taking this thing to heart is he? I mean, if anything should happen to Lee Chow as a result of his being present at the box opening, Edwin wouldn't imagine that he was to blame, and—perhaps—"

"Be thrown back into his old nervous condition?" Edwin's wife countered calmly. "I don't think there's a chance in the world of anything like that affecting Edwin. In the first place, physicians and surgeons must steel themselves to losing patients some times — if they couldn't, they would all be in insane asylums, and there would be nobody to attend the sick

"In the second place, Edwin, I am sure, is fully recovered now. Do you know, Margaret, in the light of that story you told me, I don't believe his breakdown was due as much to overwork as it was to worry over his daughter."

HARRIET'S PROBLEM SOLVED

"No doubt you are right," I answered, "which brings me to a very important question. How are things now between you and Edwin?"

"Can't you see the answer in my face?" she exclaimed

"It is a very happy face, certainly," I said tenderly

"And a very happy woman behind the face," she said quickly. "And Edwin says he is happy for the first time in years, now that he no longer is keeping this secret from me"

"Have you said anything to him yet about your plan to invite his daughter into your home?"

"How could I?" she cried reproachfully. "I promised you I wouldn't speak of it yet. But I can see that it is Edwin's secret desire, and I can not keep quiet much longer."

Infection in the Bones Serious

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D

At a recent medical meeting there was announced a new method of treating that disease with a big name, "osteomyelitis." The new treatment is said to have met with astonishing success. This is indeed gratifying to all physicians who have met the many difficulties connected with this ailment.

Osteomyelitis is an infection of a bone. Any bone of the body may be involved. It is a disease commonly encountered in growing and active children. In adults usually it can be traced to some accident or injury to the bone During the World War it was a common complication of gunshot wounds.

RESULTS FROM FALL

Osteomyelitis ... children may be the result of a simple scratch or wound that has been neglected. Frequently a child falls and injures himself while at play and fails to tell his parents of the accident. This is unfortunate, because there is always the possibility of infection. If precautions are taken at the proper time the disease may be prevented

Most cases of osteomyelitis are caused by a germ called the "staphilococcus." This particular agent of evil may reside in infected tonsils, teeth, adenoids or other structures, and be carried from one part of the body to another When there is a fall or blow the germs may localize at the site of the injury

This is why a severe blow may be the beginning of a series of chances which end in osteomyelitis Of course, it is not necessary to have a blow in order that osteomyelitis may develop If the germs are in the system there may be trouble without the history of an injury.

As a rule, the first evidence of the infection appears suddenly, with marked chills and high fever. The infected bone is tender and painful. Sometimes the adjacent joint, too, is swollen and painful

X-RAY IS SURE WAY

A child who complains of pain in an arm or leg should be carefully examined by the doctor.

If there is any doubt as to whether the pain is due to osteomyelitis, and X-ray picture will accurately determine the truth. A definite haziness in the plate will indicate involvement of the injured bone

Mild cases of osteomyelitis respond to ample treatment. But if the disease becomes chronic it is exceedingly difficult to overcome

The new way of treating osteomyelitis is by the injection of what the modern scientist calls a "bacteriophage," a germ product. This has been shown to check destruction of the bone and completely to heal the wound.

Besides the [illegible] there are fractions [illegible] Communist groups [illegible] more [illegible] and [illegible] of [illegible] in the Communist organization.

These [illegible] in every New England community where there is a manufacturing plant and in many others where there is no manufacturing but where the farmers are considered susceptible to radical influence.

In general they are permitted to pursue their activities without interference by the [illegible].

Boston is the only New England city with a radical squad devoting [illegible] time to keeping [illegible].

[illegible] of the Communist [illegible].

The arrests guided by expert advice from the International Labor Defense manage in most of their activities to keep just within the law, but upon overstepping it they are quickly halted by police action in Boston. Outside Boston, however, it is another story.

An example of police action highly disconcerting to the radical leaders was the arrest of a Communist chief a few months ago for allegedly conducting a lottery for the purpose of raising funds.

This [illegible] step on his part and [illegible] has been [illegible] demonstration [illegible] Boston [illegible] past few months.

In other New England communities [illegible] activities for the most part go on without interference in spite of the fact that each demonstration, each raising of funds and all propaganda carried on legally and illegally, are chapters in a program of revolution.

There are 46 Communist organizations in Boston, besides the sections and units of the Communist party, and these groups are constantly holding meetings. Some of the groups are split into several subsections. Painstaking work is required of the police squad to watch all these gatherings.

The John Reed Club, which has connection with the [illegible] rank and file of the Communist [illegible] and which conducts social affairs [illegible] [illegible] and in strike [illegible] for [illegible] the limits of [illegible] in order to avoid the scrutiny of the squad.

So difficult have Communist activities become in Boston that a list of instructions for all persons arrested in radical demonstrations has been drawn up and distributed to all members of the party for guidance in case of arrest.

Those arrested are instructed to do no talking whatever beyond giving their names and ages and to demand that the International Labor Defense which drew up the [illegible] be notified.

There are more than [illegible] [illegible]. Even with the [illegible] carefully avoided and activities are kept within state law under the direction of the district chiefs.

Besides the Communist Party, which is a nationwide organization paying tribute to chiefs in Moscow, there are more than 600 other nationwide organizations affiliated with the party.

Some of these are international organizations. Others are trade union groups, cultural societies, youth organizations, legal aid organizations, atheist groups, veterans leagues and unions of the unemployed.

The Young Communist League alone reported a membership gain of 130 per cent [illegible] among college [illegible] who [illegible] the National Student League and in an [illegible] organized dozens of joint action movements in which it gained the co-operation, not only of students but of college professors and presidents.

Carroll Vanities in Fist Fight Over Pay and 'Red' Talk

FIFI D'ORSAY, LEIBERT OUT

Charlotte, N. C., Nov. 19 (AP)—Earl Carroll's touring Vanities was a hotbed of charges and counter charges, of fistic fights and deferred salary payments today as Carroll himself gave notice to Fifi D'Orsay, petit actress lead, for "not doing the show much good" and dismissed Sam Leibert for alleged "communistic activities."

Leibert halted the show, just 11 days on tour, here last night by breaking onto the stage and demanding the audience request the show be stopped.

Carroll, who had arrived suddenly by plane, walked on the stage flanked by policemen, [illegible] quiet to Leibert's charges of non-payment of salaries and of fights in Raleigh when he and Miss D'Orsay allegedly were struck by J. M. McKechnie, company manager, then ordered the show to go on.

Police Guard

The show went on—quietly from that point with the audience wondering what it was all about.

But the officers remained backstage [illegible] in case and today Carroll [illegible] Leibert had been dismissed [illegible] that Miss D'Orsay [illegible] would leave the [illegible] "because she is too high-salaried an actress and because she isn't doing the show much good."

Leibert [illegible] announced a campaign to expose [illegible] Carroll [illegible] denied with others of the cast that salaries were due.

Then the Fight

Leibert said the fight in Raleigh occurred in a Pullman car following a general argument, that McKechnie [illegible] Paul McCullough, one of the comedians [illegible] from his berth [illegible] attack Fifi when she [illegible] [illegible] Leibert.

Miss D'Orsay [illegible] [illegible] of fights and [illegible].

[illegible] would replace Miss D'Orsay.

Leibert was the central figure in a sketch, "The Print Shop," which was dropped from the show.

150 MORE WPA JOBS IN QUINCY

Promise of WPA jobs for more than 150 men was made today by Mayor Thomas S. Burgin of Quincy, who said he expected that a project to repair 70 unaccepted streets would begin next week.

WPA rules forbid work on unaccepted streets, but the mayor said he overcame this objection by showing the authorities that the streets had been publicly used for more than 20 years.

The funds for this project have not been provided yet, but Mayor Burgin said WPA headquatrers had promised them. He expects $100,000 and estimates that the work will last si xto eight months.

According to eGorge Pfaffman, district WPA supervisor, there are 1,000 men on Federal relief in Quincy and 400 more will be added next week. In addition, 50 men are to get work on sidewalk projects on which state and federal authorities are co-operating.

She is suffering from a fractured leg and her condition has been aggravated by a heart attack.

Her four children remained near her bedside after an all-night vigil during which Mrs. Roosevelt, the doctors said, slept fitfully.

JUNIOR BIRDMEN OF AMERICA

DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE YOUTH OF THE AMERICAS IN AVIATION — TODAY'S PILOTS OF MODELS —TOMORROW'S MODEL PILOTS!

The old-fashioned person who is "afraid to fly" will have his fears quieted by attending the Junior Birdmen rally at 8 o'clock tonight in Odd Fellows Hall, 13 Reynolds street, Chelsea, when the five-reel motion picture, "Safety of the Federal Skyways," is shown.

The film, produced and furnished for this special occasion by the U. S. Bureau of Air Commerce, presents interesting details involved in the establishment and operation of a federal airway, including the negotiations for leases, improvement of emergency fields and airports, setting up of various types of beacons, radio broadcasting of weather reports and flights of mail, express and passenger planes.

Randolph C. Wills

The rally will be open to the public. All friends of aviation, particularly Junior Birdmen, are invited. It will be held under the auspices of the Junior Birdmen Squadron, 599 of Everett, commanded by Leslie C. Woodman.

The program will include an exhibition of model planes built by members of this unit and a demonstration of a microfilm-covered model by the commander.

Chester A. Card, Dartmouth street, Everett, in whose basement the group meets, will preside as master of ceremonies. Brief talks will be given by Frederick Faunce, noble grand of Winnisimmet Lodge, I. O. O. F.; John E. Wheelock, traffic manager of the American Air Lines and L. F. Ross, Junior Birdmen wing commander.

Randolph C. Wills, Everett, sponsor of the squadron, will read the script accompanying the five film reels.

The meeting is one of the most ambitious held by a Junior Birdmen flight unit. Several hundred persons are expected at the meeting as members have urged their parents to attend.

THIS IS LIFE

ROBERT E. ROGERS

By Robert E. Rogers

Our American habit of getting the drop on anniversaries, just as we publish magazines at least a month ahead of date, is again illustrated by the publicity beginning to appear anent the Mark Twain centenary.

The ancient and honorable order of press agents, public relations counsel, and plain enthusiasts like to take a long running start and come a-soaring through the air on the predestined date amid the cheers of the populace.

Then — whiff! — the anniversary and event fades into oblivion as if it never occurred.

On my desk at this moment is a foot-long reproduction of the proposed Mark Twain memorial by Sculptor Walter Russell which lovers of Mark Twain hope to erect at his birthplace. About that latter point I am not certain, because most news stories suggest Hannibal, Missouri, as the site for the memorial.

Now Hannibal was the home of Tom Sawyer but NOT Mark Twain's birthplace. That was Florida, Missouri, but in comparison with Hannibal the place is hardly known at all.

I hope the memorial will be located in Hannibal, where Aunt Polly lived and Becky Thatcher and Huckleberry Finn, not to mention Indian Jim.

All Twain's Characters Portrayed in Memorial

The memorial looks to be impressive and highly illustrative in its subject matter. It consists of the various important groups of Mark Twain's characters, stretching out from either side of the chair on which the story teller sits with one arm around his favorite child, Tom Sawyer.

At one end of the portrait gallery in bronze is Joan of Arc before her judges. Then, if I am not mistaken, we see some figures from the Connecticut Yankee and the Prince and the Pauper, little Tom Canty and young Edward VI.

On the other side of Clemens we see the realistic figures from Hannibal and the Mississippi, Huck Finn in his torn wide-brimmed straw, Nigger Jim, the Dauphin and the Duke and the rest of that strange gallery of river folk.

I know of only one similar group in American sculpture. Those are the bas-relief that commemorates the figures of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow on Mt. Auburn street, Cambridge, at the foot of the little park that fronts Craigie House and gave Longfellow his beloved view down to the Charles river.

There you may see Hiawatha and Evangeline and the Miles Standish figures, and possibly one or two others.

Authors With Pseudonyms Found Difficult to Check

It's not particularly important, but I wish publishers had some kind of uniform way of treating authors who use pseudonyms. I found such annoyance in looking up Mark Twain to check on his birth date, which really is on November 30.

I proceeded to look him up in all the available books of reference. One or two were foolish enough to list him under Samuel L. Clemens with a sub reference to Mark Twain, which is pretty stupid.

The others listed him by his famous writing name, the only one generally known, but then they parted company. In one case I looked up Twain and had to look up MARK Twain; the other time I looked up Mark and had to turn to TWAIN Mark. Make up your minds; say I.

Connecticut Yankee Retains Its Old Power

For most of us it will be sufficient to read at least one of the greatest and best beloved of the books. These are: Tom Sawyer, Huckleberry Finn, The Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court, The Prince and the Pauper, Puddenhead Wilson, and The Personal Memoirs of Joan of Arc.

Too few people know that record of a lost civilization, Life on the Mississippi. Innocents Abroad and A Tramp Abroad, hilarious ha they are, date badly.

Except for a few notable short stories, such as The Man Who Corrupted Hadleyburg, most of his miscellanies are terrible junk and better forgotten. His repeated attempts to revive Tom Sawyer are among the worst.

A few weeks ago I picked up The Connecticut Yankee to verify a reference and, literally, could not put it down until once more I had read it through. The old power was still there!

WOMEN TO 'DRIVE WIVES OFF JOBS'

Alumnae Display Styles

SHOW AIDS ACADEMY

By MARGUERITE DOWNEY

The northeaster blew away but the icy blasts it left in its wake didn't keep Notre Dame grads from journeying to the Copley Plaza last evening for the alumnae fashion show and bridge.

Genevieve Mullin did an excellent job as chairman of the party. Wearing a metal-trimmed frock of blue velvet she was as smart as any of the models.

Mrs. Thomas Walsh dashed busily about, lending assistance and directing the galaxy of girls selling chances. She was most attractive in fuchsia lace, lighter-toned flowers at its decollatage.

Acting as an informal reception committee were Phyllis White, petite in black crepe, ivory ornaments clipping its neckline; Marie Mullen, chic in a tunic dress of chocolate brown matelasse, and Rita Guthrie, whose own of ginger silk was edged with turquoise crepe.

The style parade was exceptionally good, the latest fashions for sports, street and evening wear passing in colorful review. Isabelle Maguire of Somerville opened the show, parading down the runway in a gay outfit for shooting or skiing.

Cruise Costume

Joan Leonard wore togs for a spirited canter in the park and Mary Hogan was a forecast of winter cruises in oyster white beach togs, brown buttons and polka-dot kerchief completing her ensemble.

Eleanor Sullivan did some modeling with her usual professional finesse . . . appearing on time in a very smart velvet ensemble for tea dancing and again making her entrance in coral chiffon, girdled in gold.

The entire Mullin family was on hand to see daughter Loretta make her debut as a mannequin. She's a blue-eyed blonde . . . and wore a grey kidskin coat atop her soft blue frock.

Mary Dacey displayed the last word in evening fashions . . . topping her shirtwaist frock of bright blue net with a hooded wrap of dark blue velvet. Doris Cronin made a dramatic entrance in orchid chiffon, and Anne Devine, who chairmans the Mary Frances Rooney School dance Friday night was "divine" in her evening ensemble of white satin and ermine.

MARY HOGAN

Fashion, turning its attention south, looks with approval on this beach ensemble of white silk with brown buttons, and a kerchief of brown polka dot satin, as displayed by Mary Hogan of Watertown.

Monterey Blue

Ruth Walsh . . . who also did mannequin duty . . . changed into a chic ensemble of Monterey blue wool to indulge in a round of bridge. Her matching hat sported two beaver pom-pons.

Claire Fallon took her bridge most seriously. She wore a cape of cross-fox with her brown costume and was accompanied by her sister, Eleanor, in brown bachrera. Rosemary Gorman, who won the door prize of the evening, was a guest at their table. She chose a frock of brown crepe and a Glengarry cap of matching fell.

Margaret Reid's guest for the evening was Phyllis Sullivan of Pittsfield, who's in town for a course of study at Boston University Law school. Margaret was attired in black rabbit's wool, an ascot of green velvet its only trimming. Phyllis wore black crepe with her mink coat.

Hattie Lyons was there with her mother, Mrs. Michael Lyons . . . the former topped in rust winter suit, collared in lynx, the latter in a navy ensemble.

In Red Halo

Rose Fitzgerald wore a halo hat of Burgundy red with her matching frock and Barbara Lynch was lovely in a cinnamon brown outfit.

The matrons were among those present lending their generous support to the undertaking. Mrs. Marguerite Maguire, a beret of blue felt topping her smart grey coiffure . . . Mrs Thomas Kelly, prominent in the Cecilian Guild, wearing a tunic of heavy white crepe with her black suit . . . and Mrs. Phillip White of Brookline, effective in a tailleur of deep orchid wool.

Glimpsed Mary Clarissa McCarthy of Brookline, smartly turned out in a lynx-trimmed suit of Dubonnet wool . . . Mary Duis of Belmont, every in black crepe, ornaments of brilliant at the neck line . . . and Louise Maguire of Newton, a fetching lingot of kelly over her outfit of wine un cut velvet.

It was all very merry, marking the first affair of the season . . . to benefit the Boston Academy of Notre Dame alumnae scholarship fund.

56 Million Paid Locally in Wages

Boston in 1934 continued to lead the state as a manufacturing center, figures made public today by the State department of labor revealed.

Paying $56,101,831 in wages, industrial enterprises here were three times as great as those of Cambridge and Worcester, nearest competitors to Boston.

The very latest word in styles was displayed at the Alumnae of Boston Academy of Notre Dame bridge and fashion show at the Copley-Plaza. Here is Dorothy Dillon of Newton in a rainy day costume of transparent oiled silk of lemon yellow and a gay umbrella of orange silk. Isabelle Maguire of Somerville is seen in a shooting or skiing costume of brown wool. Note the bell boy jacket and jaunty cap of scotch plaid. Joan Leonard of Jamaica Plain is wearing a riding outfit of ginger brown and whipcord breeches.

'Work for Unwed,' Is Cry

Note Lauds Monsignor

Married women who hold jobs in Massachusetts factories, while their husbands are also working, must not be driven out to provide jobs for single men and women, Miss Florence Birmingham, president of the Massachusetts Women's Political Club, declared today.

She denounced married women who hold jobs, in a letter to Monsignor John B. Labossiere of St. Joseph's church, Salem in which she praised him for his stand against the employment of wives and mothers in the mills.

Increase Buying

"We plan to take our battle into the various communities with a flying squadron of speakers, while another squadron will visit employment managers of stores, offices and factories," wrote Miss Birmingham.

"We will impress on them the need of hiring single men and women, in place of married women with husbands working, if employers wish to stabilize the economic system by increasing the purchasing power of the people, through a fair distribution of jobs.

"Discharging married women, whose their employment provides a double income in the family, would speed business recovery. After hearing thousands of pitiful stories of single women, some of whom have been launched upon lives of crime and shame because they could not get work, we know you are more than correct in your statement that it is necessary to remove married women with working husbands from industry.

Little Incidents

"Of the employees of the Pequot Mills in Salem, 70 per cent are women and 55 per cent are married. These women consider the child but an incident in their working life instead of the main factor about which their lives should be built.

"Union officials, instead of waging an unjust fight to retain married women, should strive for a higher wage for the husband and father, whose responsibility it is to support his family, while it is the duty of wife and mother to make her home a place of peace and light."

Mill Machinery Shipped South

More than 100 carloads of New England textile machinery have been shipped to Southern mills in the last two weeks, entirely from liquidated mills.

This concrete evidence of the heavy losses being suffered by the New England textile industry was learned exclusively today by the Boston American from Frank Chamberlin, buyer of the machinery.

Before leaving for his home in Lincolnton, N. C., Chamberlin said that he had options on many thousands of carload, of Northern machinery South in the last few years, told a Boston Evening reporter that even greater liquidation faced the New England textile industry.

He said that high taxes and high labor costs were the compelling factor in the Southward move of the industry.

Robbery Sifted In Somerville

Somerville police were conducting an investigation today into the armed robbery by two men of Barney Price, a teamster, of Myrtle avenue, Somerville. The holdup men took $50 and fled out in an automobile.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN

By Marjorie McBride

It's natural to wonder about the front page ladies and gentlemen who were crashing the headlines not so long ago. Which way did they go? where are they now?

MARJORIE McBRIDE

Well, Jessie Costello, principal in a famous murder trial, is recovering from an illness at her Peabody home . . . Norma Millen is in New York, writing the story of her life for a magazine . . . Rose Knellar, Abe Fabers sweetheart, retains her job as bookkeeper in a Washington street shop . . . Catherine Warner, beautiful waitress, dismissed from Harvard Union's dining room so the boys could concentrate on their calories, sells jewelry in a Tremont street store.

Louis Berrett, one of two innocent men held in duress for a Faber-Millen crime, bought a taxi business with the money paid him by the Commonwealth to atone for false imprisonment . . . James H. Edmund Reardon at 99 Still an "L" Straphanger

Edmund Reardon of Cambridge is the greater city's outstanding straphanger. Perhaps appropriately, for once he was a vice-president of the Boston Elevated. Anyway, he rides to town on the subway every morning.

A few tie-ups ago, a kindly young lady tried to give him her seat. Gently, but firmly, he declined. And grasped a strap. He is a lusty ninety-nine years old!

Fred Finnerty, Charles street antique dealer, is trying to find out. A fussy old lady demanded some specimens of that period. Nobody in Charles street knew the answer, and the street's the antique capital of New England. Ladies rather more literate in antiquities are just now demanding pattern glass of the vintage of 1850.

Judge Lummus Collects Razors, Old Mugs as Hobby

A goodly number of sedate Bostonians are losing both sleep and hair trying to find the trick in a mathematical puzzler posed by Sophie Tucker, the actress. It goes this way.

You put down your right age . . . Multiply by two . . . Add five . . . Multiply result by fifty . . . Subtract 365 . . . Add the amount of change in your pocket, reduced to penny units . . . Add one hundred and fifteen.

Invariably, the first two numbers of the total will represent your age . . . The last two numbers will be the change in your pocket.

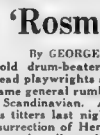
HOLLAND

Eva Le Gallienne in 'Rosmersholm'

By GEORGE HOLLAND

Your old drum-beater against revival of dead works by dead playwrights sounds another tocsin today along the same general rumble, extending his alarum to include the Scandinavian. A most forbearing audience withheld its titters last night at the Colonial Theater where a resurrection of Henrik Ibsen's "Rosmersholm" occurred most gloomily under the brilliant aegis of the accomplished Eva Le Gallienne.



George Holland

Instead of forever holding my peace, which will be advised no doubt with jeers a week hence when another piece by Ibsen called "Ghosts" takes the stage of the same theater, it becomes an unwilling duty to the conditions of this space to report that "Rosmersholm" is dated, forensic and elocutional stilted in the extreme. Illogical, boring, unreal, early-Victorian and stuffy playwriting.

It is not Miss Le Gallienne's fault in her capacity as adapter, although the version of the Ibsen shocker currently available is her's alone, from the playwright's original. Other adapters have tried to draw interesting conclusions from "Rosmersholm" and have, in this opinion failed.

Nearing the end of the last act, when Miss Le Gallienne as Rebecca West begins another expositional period by telling Johannes Rosmer that she has "a past," one becomes certain that Ibsen wrote "Rosmersholm" under the influence of a crystal that foretold the coming of the movies. The crystal should have dictated a more appealing title.

The story of "Rosmersholm" is a triple-suicide pact arranged by Fate working through the starry character of Rebecca West, who, if there ever was one, is a female what-is-it? Advocate of some 1885-90 "isms," Rebecca West is a glorified and platonic mistress of the home of Johannes Rosmer, an ex-pastor, now a free-thinker.

No definite causes are espoused by Rebecca West, but that could be a piece of lackadaisical playwriting. When Miss West develops as a character who "began to work" on the mind of the late Mrs. Rosmer (she leaped into the offings) torrent and died by self-effacement through drowning); as a character who found that after being an accessory to the mental homicide she decided that she was not in love with Mr. Rosmer after all; who accepts a proposal by Mr. Rosmer to square it all by taking a drug into oblivion herself, and who finds it pretty joyous when Mr. Rosmer volunteers to take the drug with her—I say would you like to buy a duck!

A competent actress herself, Miss Le Gallienne finds the best possible support in Leona Roberts in the play's only credible character, that of the housekeeper, and in Hugh Buckler, Donald Cameron and Averell Harris. A beautiful brace of settings for the two scenes of the play are contrived by the rearrangement of furniture and decorations in front of heavy drapes.

If you will rule back space, your correspondent save himself an awful lot of writing. Read words by dead playwrights." With regard to Ibsen's aforementioned "Ghosts" his "The Master-Builder" and also "The Doll's House," not to speak of "Hedda Gabbler," he hereby inaugurates a movement, hoping that it enroll both Miss Le Gallienne and Katharine Cornell as leaders, really to inter "Rosmersholm" for now and for all. Miss Cornell proposes to produce a version by Eugene Gay-Tiffi of "Rosmersholm" next season. I hope that she doesn't. Its thrills are thrills no longer; it belongs as a museum-piece of 70 years ago, and students of the drama may read William Archer's version between the covers of a book.

Carole Lombard to Star In Chic Costumes

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor Universal Service
Copyright, 1935, by Universal Service

Los Angeles, Nov. 19—Fashion contests may come and fashion contests may go but there never has been any woman in the mind of Travis Banton who equals Carole Lombard's chic.

Louella O. Parsons

Of course, Travis has an awful leaning toward Marlene Dietrich for he designs most of her clothes both on and off the screen. But Carole, Travis has always said, could really be a fashion model if she cared to concentrate on clothes.

Travis will have Carole dressed to the teeth for "Fashion Spy" in which she plays a girl who is sent to Europe to steal fashion styles for an American company.

The story is an original by John Francis Larkin. One more word—Travis promises to show advance styles in this picture which will give the girls throughout the country a chance to do a little copying.

Preston Foster has been promising himself a trip to New York for months, but always when he got ready to hop the choo choo he was called back to make a picture.

Now Radio has promised him as soon as he finishes "Green Shadow," he can have that vacation. But he can't take too long a one for he is down for the lead in "Court Pete," by Francis Cockrell, a Cosmopolitan Magazine story which Pandro Berman bought with Preston in mind.

Almost any moon you can see a crowd of stars on the "Colleen" set at Warner Brothers, watching Paul Draper dance. His interpretive jig is something entirely new, have Leslie Howard so intrigued that he has been trying to learn the intricate steps.

By the way, if Irving Thalberg doesn't want Leslie pronto for "Romeo and Juliet" he will lose him because Leslie has seven people lined up for his New York play of "Hamlet," all of whom are under salary.

Hal Wallis who has never suggested his wife Louise Fazenda, for any part had to acquiesce gracefully when Louise was put into "Colleen" as Hugh Herbert's wife. Those two ought to be really funny together.

CHATTER IN HOLLYWOOD—Hollywood has a new romance, hotter than pepper and as sizzling as fat in the fire. Mickey Rooney is in love. He has a terrible crush on Carol Shannon, 14-year-old sister of Peggy Shannon, and every nickel he can coax from his mother goes for flowers and candy for his fair inamorata.

I'm afraid the romance will die a speedy death if they don't stop breaking him on the Model A lot for Mickey hates to be ribbed.

Snapshots of Hollywood

HELENE COSTELLO dining with JACK RUBEN; MRS. RUBEN same place same night dining at another table with BILL HAWKS and a party; looks as if the rift in the RUBEN family is past mending. GEORGE GIVOT better make up his mind whether it's ALICE FAYE or ALICE WHITE, maybe he has a weakness for the name "Alice"; ETHEL MERMAN going social for a day and giving all the sound men and technicians on the EDDIE CANTOR picture a party and, believe it or not, the gang all wore gardenias in her honor. IRVING THALBERG JUNIOR was MERLE OBERON'S first caller when she returned from England; he took along his baby sister, KATRINA, and inquired anxiously if his rival DAVID NIVEN, had been there yet; RALPH FORBES and HEATHER ANGEL, who have had so many scares from burglars and whose dogs were poisoned, have a watchman now to scare away the bugaboos. That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Ginger Stars Solo

Without benefit of Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers will make her solo starring debut on a Boston screen tomorrow night at Keith's Memorial Theater, in a film entitled "In Person."

George Brent

Miss Rogers' new picture will have its preview following the last performance of "Transatlantic Tunnel," Sam Jr. Hopkins Adams, who wrote "It Happened One Night," is author of the new Ginger Rogers vehicle.

"La Vie Paree," with two-score chorus girls and a set of talented principals, is heralded as an adequate successor to the "Follow Bergeree" the Continental show which marched away from Boston lately with all house-records of the RKO Boston in its press agent's files.

"La Vie Paree" takes the stage of the Boston Thursday, and A. B. Marcus, producer of the new musical, is certain that three numbers, "The Golden Fountain of Youth," "The Living Shawls of Spain" and "The Dance of Temptation," will cause audiences to gasp.

Norman Lloyd Is Peabody Playhouse Star

By HARRIS MORGAN

Inscribed on the asbestos curtain in the Elizabeth Peabody Playhouse is the following Shakespearian quotation: "Act well your part: there all the honour lies."

Last night Norman Lloyd playing the role of Dr. Knock in a three act comedy bearing the same title, presented by the Associated Actors Theater, abided with the quotation.

For it was Lloyd who acted well and received the plaudits of the audience. Had it not been for his superb acting the play would have been quite dull and uninteresting.

During the entire three acts, Lloyd carried the brunt of the load as the doctor who makes good in a small town.

The play, written by Jules Romaine, is based on a doctor in a French country village who turns his practice over to another doctor who professes to uphold the honor of the medical profession. The latter turns out to be a charlatan. And the good Dr. Knock lives up to it.

Robert de San Marzano is Dr. Parpalind who decides to turn his practice over and start anew in another section of France.

At the Bowdoin

Again tonight, a continuance of its new Tuesday policy, the Bowdoin Theater will offer vaudeville in conjunction with its feature films. The new picture-program, starting tomorrow, includes Claudette Colbert in "She Married Her Boss," and "Atlantic Adventure with Nancy Carroll, Harry Langdon and Lloyd Nolan.

Walter Brown Falls Victim to Old Hockey Wanderlust

THE SUGARY TONES OF Temptation are moaning that Siren Song on the ears of young Walter Brown again, a faraway call to hit the vagabond trails of Europe as chaperone of a troup of amateur hockey tramps. As the adult heir to Hopkinton's Squire, George V. Brown, Walter has promoted four well-behaved hockey junkets to the Old World, in which neither profit nor losses occurred; bits of astute travel-engineering that won admiration even from Papa Brown, who is a stingy man with applause.

Austen Lake

But when, two Aprils ago, Walter dropped anchor the last time, Dad was standing on the pier-head and growled, "Son, your days of free wheeling are over." And he riveted Walter, who is a genial lad with plenty of what it takes, down to an office chair as sub-manager of the Arena.

But yesterday there was the sniff of wood-smoke in the air and strains of mental music. A suggestive itch tickled the soles of Walter's feet. So he was not surprised when the morning mail contained an official invitation from the Olympic committee to become guide, cash-guardian and tour-papa to the American Olympic hockey team, which leaves next January 3 for a barnstorming trip over Continental Europe.

And across his inner eye flashed visions of the Tyrol's snowy slopes; the model villages in the Swiss valleys, the cafe terraces, and the toy-toots of European trains. What would Papa George say?

But George V. Brown is planning an Olympic trip of his own, just as he has done since their old beginning. And what is sauce for the Dad is gravy for the son. So today Walter is wondering how best to break the news to Father. And finally a bright idea hit him.

This is it!

B. C. Dean's Retort Courteous

WISHING TO POUR a little extra learning over B. C. football lads during the interval between now and the Holy Cross game, Harry Downes scheduled evening blackboard drills. First, according to custom, he asked permission, and this is what he got from Dean Joseph R. N. Maxwell, S. J.:

"Dear Harry . . . It seems to me that the midnight oil would be better burned in preparation for the approaching midyears. True, I never miss a varsity game on our own campus. But I believe the art of forward passing during the football season is wholly secondary to the art of passing forward at the end of the school year. Sympathetically yours, Rev. J. Maxwell, S. J."

Which keynotes B. C.'s sensible attitude toward student games, and ushers the matter out with music.

Momentous A. A. U. Moments

THOSE QUAINT WOBBLIES, the New England A. A. U. committee, has just mailed out return postcards to its 125 member clubs, asking a vote on the weighty question of whether the Walking Committee should receive $14.50 to conduct a 10,000 Meters Walk under auspices of the West End House. It is signed J. Frank Facey, Sec.-Treas.

Now the cost of printing these cards—done in the print shop of J. Frank Facey—is four or five dollars. The postage on the duplex card, is about $2.50 more. So that it costs about $8 to decide a $14.50 appropriation.

This is a fair specimen of the official footwork of the local A. A. U. daddies, who in recent session voted to appropriate enough funds from the kid-athletes' earnings to pay A. J. Lill's haulage and hotelage to New York for the coming convention. Lill holds no office other than past regional president, but the boys thought it would be jolly to have him as a house guest when the shindig starts.

Floral Wreath to Old Sideline Gnomes

A FEW SEASONS AGO when an electric scoreboard, with a full assortment of drugstore lights, was introduced at Harvard's Stadium, it dispensed with an old and pictorial tradition. No longer does Eddie Morris strut the sidelines in his tattered red jumper and his pajama's hat, while performing his monkey-on-the-stick antics to keep the old, hand-handled scoreboard informed. And the grave-digger's voice in the amplifier horns succeeded Eddie's brass lungs and the lingering echo of his syllables as he had announced the scores in a bull bellow that blew the bonnets off the football girls.

Pennsylvania is one of the few institutions which clings to an old scoreboard sweetheart, in the person of Forrest Mages, who started to operate the board as a freshman in 1895 and has continued ever since. The age of mechanics has supplanted the old sideline gnomes.

THE BIGGEST, HAIRIEST burlies in football seem to be raised in the corn belt of the Middle West, according to a census of the National Pro Football League. Of 380 players, exactly one-third (76) have come from the Mississippi watershed. College which claims the most prolific motherhood of mercenary sons, is Pittsburgh, which has graduated eleven to the salaried ranks, as against eight for next best Alma Mother, Oregon.

Not unmindful that, if his dream of reconditioning comes off, he may soon be taking battle-sights on Joe Louis's chin, Jack Sharkey has invited the Negro genius to sit among the ringside jury when he takes his physical examination with Winston Friday night.

Weep for Billy Evans, the ex-umpire who quit his job as Cleveland's baseball boss, outraged when his salary was whittled down to a mere $12,500. Being paid in proportion to what he accomplished, Billy was scaled down from an original $30,000. Having ideals higher than his income, Billy said his leisure was more valuable than Cleveland's last offer. Rumor whispers he has a job waiting in the business office at Detroit.

Three Boston Bruins aces are, Tiny Thompson, Cooney Weiland and Defense Kingpin Shore. They're near top form, for their Boston National Hockey League debut of this season tonight in the Garden. The New York Americans are the invaders, and a near capacity crowd is expected at the battle. Bruins won American Division title last spring.

COLLINS ATTENDS MINORS' CONCLAVE

MAY DROP CHARLOTTE CLUB

By Joe Cashman

The minor league meeting, most representative of off-season pow-wows, opens at Dayton O., today.

General Manager Eddie Collins is out there representing the Red Sox.

The Fenway foreman brought along a large supply of his favorite mouth and throat antiseptic. He doesn't want to get hoarse when the magnates start bidding for each other's stars.

But Eddie doesn't expect to return with any new players.

HERBIE THERE

"I'm not going to Dayton in the hope of completing any deals, though I may succeed in setting the stage for trades I hope to put over at the big league meetings in Chicago next month," said E. Trowbridge before starting West.

"I'm making this trip principally to try to solve some of our minor league farm problems. Herbie Pennock will be present to help me.

"We can't very well afford to keep a club in Charlotte if that town persists in its ban on Sunday ball. We'll have to find a new town for the franchise.

"I also am anxious to add to our minor league chain, if possible."

While the Braves' future is still the season's most baffling sports mystery, the last word your envoy had from Manager Bill McKechnie was that he (Bill) would be at meeting with money to spend for players and high hopes of getting a few.

CATCHER

The Tribal pilot made several trade proposals during the World Series. He was promised answers at Dayton, and he believes some will be favorable.

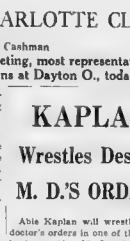
McKechnie wouldn't mention any names, but he admitted he is chiefly interested in acquiring a capable young catcher.

Eddie Collins will rush back to Boston to report on his trip before going down to Marse Tom Yawkey's Carolina hunting lodge for a vacation.

It's possible that McKechnie, too, will show up here later in the week, especially since he failed to put in a planned appearance last week.

KAPLAN Wrestles Despite M. D.'S ORDERS

Abie Kaplan will wrestle despite doctor's orders in one of the special bouts on Alex MacLean's card tomorrow night at the Arena which brings Count Casimir Polowski and Leo Hyatt together in the main event.



Little Moose

Kaplan suffered a cut over his eye last Wednesday night which required seven stitches to close, yet insists on meeting Hermi Olson tomorrow night.

The doctor has warned Kaplan that another such slash will put him out of action for months.

"Silent" Abbott, 245-pound deaf and dumb wrestler from Texas, makes his bow in the semifinal, meeting Henry Piers, scissors king from Haarlem, Holland.

Abbott, formerly with the Rodeo, is considered the strongest man in Texas where he got his early training as a cowboy, tossing steers and wild broncs.

Another special bout will be Maxie "Windmill" Goldberg vs. Boris Demetroff, while Chief Little Moose will be seen in a preliminary against Sian Sticiney.

Count Polowski, Polish strongman, faces the first defeat of his career in the feature against Hyatt, ex-Gold Secret ,who is at the peak of his form right now.

He's Out Detroit Cool to Evans

Detroit, Nov. 19 (LS)—Reports that William "Bill" Evans, recent general manager of the Indians, would take over the direction of the world champion Detroit Tigers were denied today by Charles Navin, secretary of the Detroit Tigers.

Navin said:

"It's news to us. I know nothing about it."

Navin pointed out that two factors ultimately would decide who actually will fill the shoes of Frank J. Navin, whose death robbed the club of its directing genius.

One, he said, was Navin's will, yet to be made public, which disposes of his share in the club. The other is the decision of Walter O. Briggs, co-owner, now wintering in Miami Beach, Fla.

LEVINSKY Tangles With WRESTLER

St Louis, Nov. 19—The answer to that age-old question—Can a boxer lick a wrestler?—may be forthcoming here tonight when Kingfish Levinsky, who once fought Joe Louis, tangles with Ray Steele a topflight matman.

Levinsky and Steele are to go 10 three-minute rounds under a special set of rules drawn up by the state athletic board.

Levinsky can employ any tactics he may see fit, including wrestling and punching while on the mat.

Steele, on the other hand, must stick to wrestling. He will be forbidden to punch, kick or gouge.

If Steele is floored, he will have the benefit of a 10-second count. Conversely, he will be required to pin the Kingfish for ten seconds to win.

Steele weighs 215, Levinsky 210.

Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 19—Syracuse's eleven, knocked out of the undefeated class Saturday by Holy Cross, will not resume practice until tomorrow.

Weiland Centers First Line As Bruins Open Tonight

By Bill Grimes

With the stage set by the first cold spell of the season, the National Hockey League swings into action here tonight when the battling Bruins and New York Americans clash at the Boston Garden.

For weeks, the hockey enthusiasts have been anxiously awaiting the homecoming of the Bruins, and it is expected that some 10,000 will be on hand when Cooney Weiland and Art Chapman face off.

Since the close of last season, the Bruins have added five new players to their roster.

Of the newcomers, Weiland will receive the most hearty reception, for, while a member of the famous Dynamite Line, one of the greatest scoring units in the annals of the N. H. L., he was the idol of Bruin fans.

After a two years' absence, he is again paired with Dit Clapper.

The Bruins also acquired two great defense men, Teddy Graham and Roger Jenkins. Graham and Jenkins have been around the Calder circuit for many seasons and are well known to Bostonians.

The Bruins could not have made a better selection for replacements to Eddie Shore and Babe Siebert.

The other two new men are forwards, Jack Riley and Pat Cowley. Both are starting their second season in the N. H. L.

Riley was a star on the Pacific Coast before joining the Chicago Shamrocks, from which club he went to Detroit, only to be passed along to Les Canadiens and then shipped down here to the Bruins.

Cowley deserted the amateur ranks a year ago to tie up with George Boucher's St. Louis Eagles, and was claimed by the Bruins when that club was disbanded.

Manager Frank Patrick believes the Bruins are a faster and more efficient team than that which he piloted into the playoffs a year ago.

He has assigned Weiland to center his first line, which has Clapper and Red Beattie as its wingmen.

There are plenty of potential goals in this trio, for Weiland is a clever play maker and Clapper and Beattie are deadly shots.

At the first relief, Max Kaminsky will go in for Weiland, and Charlie Sands and Jerry Shannon will spell for Clapper and Beattie.

Much is expected of this line, for Kaminsky is smart pushing the puck, while Sands and Shannon are goal getters.

Sands, who came here a year ago from Maple Leafs, was one of the most popular players wearing a Boston uniform during the 1934-35 season. He is a hustler with far more than average ability.

Kaminsky and Shannon were not up to standard last year, due to starting the season with St. Louis, where the climate took its toll on these former amateur stars.

They are in fine condition now, and Mystery Patrick predicts they will come near the top in this league before the campaign is two months old.

After the Kaminsky line has had its turn of five-minute fling, Alex Motter, Percy O'Neil and Bill Cowley will make their first appearance.

Here's another line with fine possibilities, and probably the "tops" of all time Bruin second forward replacements.

Capt. Eddie Shore and Babe Siebert will be on the outer defense when the battle gets underway with Tiny Thompson in the nets.

BEDWELL Ships to COAST

By Associated Press

H Guy Bedwell, veteran trainer again will invade the West Coast this winter. He will ship a big stable of horses owned by A. C. Compton shortly after the close of Rowe on November 30. Bedwell raced in California last winter and enjoyed a prosperous season.

Three carloads of horses left Maryland for Miami, Fla., where the winter season opens at Tropical Park December 16. As fast as cars are available many owners and trainers plan to ship to the South, many leaving before the completion of the Bowie meeting.

As a result of a consistent campaign, Mrs. Deering Howe's Only One probably will get a chance at the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap, to be run in February at the California course. At one time he could have been claimed for $5000. His victory in the Prince George Autumn Handicap at Bowie Saturday boosted his total earnings for the season to $33,840.

THOSE UNIES

Since their last appearance here, the Americans have undergone many changes, and Manager Mervyn "Red" Dutton hopes to offset the 6-0 defeat his charges suffered at the hands of Les Canadiens with a victory over the Bruins.

Our old friends, Nels Stewart, Joe Jerwa, Hal "Lucky" Cotton, Tommy Anderson and Carl Voss, have joined the Americans since last season.

Then, too, the Dewer Dandies have Harry Oliver, Art Chapman, Dede Klein and Happy Emms, along with Sweeney Schriner, Lorne Carr, Bill Brydge and Roy Shrimp Worters.

Just wait until you get a peek at the new Bruin uniforms. They'll positively dazzle you, after the drab brown of former years.

With a new color scheme of black, gold and white, the Bruins look much snappier. The black pants with the gold side stripes are a great improvement over the faded and soiled canvas pants of yore.

WILSON'S FIRST BOWIE CHOICES

Apprentice Rates As Best Bet

By Dave Wilson
(Selections made for fast track)
BET BET — APPRENTICE

Bowie Race Track, Nov. 19 — Apprentice, barely nosed out by Chatmoss on the opening day, returns to the racing wars beautifully spotted in the one mile and a furlong of the fatured Cecelius purse here tomorrow afternoon.

FIRST—RING BEE, LIGHT, NIGHT COURT

KING BEE shapes up as the class. He has the speed to make every pola a winner. LIGHT, a clever Pimlico winner, figures to offer the contention. NIGHT COURT is a keen possibility on fast morning trials.

SECOND—ACAUTAW, MAJOR GENERAL, BOCCORD

ACAUTAW, freshened up since New England, will be coming up fit and ready. He looks all over the class. MAJOR GENERAL figures next best on general form. BOCCORD is stepping up a bit in class, but has won two in a row.

THIRD—MY KIN, IN FRONT, SPITTENIMAGE.

MY KIN, a cocking second last trip, needs only to duplicate that most recent endeavor in order to earn brackets. IN FRONT is dropping down, and figures to offer the sternest sort of contention. SPITTENIMAGE is an excellent money possibility on good New England races.

FOURTH—EVENING HOUR, CHAMBERSBURGER, REIGH TETRICH

If EVENING HOUR is ever going to earn brackets it should occur in this number. She gets in nicely under 102 pounds, and should lead from flag fall to finish. CHAMEERSBURGER flashed good form in placing to Strepha last time. REIGH TETRACH is highly fancied by the clocker.

FIFTH—APPRENTICE, FORTIFICATION, SILENT SHOT

APPRENTICE will have FORTIFICATION to down for main honors. The latter is hard to guess, but looks all dangerous on best paces. SILENT SHOT will move up in the event of mud. He is a five-star mudder.

SIXTH—FORT DEARBORN, RAMUS, DARKLING

FORT DEARBORN turned in a smashing second to Naval Cadet last trip. He needs only to duplicate that most recent performance in order to grass the winner's circle. RAMUS was a galloping winner last time. DARKLING drubbed weaker ones only a few days back.

SEVENTH—SAMBO BROWN, ZEMBLA, CANIMAR

SAMBO BROWN is well suited by all conditions in this Marathon. The route will be right down his alley. ZEMBLA won her most recent start at one mile and a furlong. CANIMAR can upset.

Zevanaid, hustled to the front without much delayed her rush from the wire, raced the leader all the stretch and just weakened at the closing strides. Jadaan, unable to keep pace early, closed fast with a rush for the stretch. Lolita Ann, well placed, was hard ridden in an effort to reach the leaders, weakened in the last sixteenth. Merry Carol was not strong enough to reach the leaders at the finish. John Warring had early speed but weakened from early efforts. Justice was outrun all the way. Wild Pigeon never was a factor.

Roentgenologist was prominent early, laced all the way and held on gamely to the close. Saturated, gave up on a long run but best stride, came to the outside in the stretch and closed with a rush. Aileen C. well placed was unable to improve her position under pressure. Prom Girl tired badly.

Sam Hurt

New York, Nov. 19—Sam Langford, famous "Boston Tar Baby," was in a critical condition here today after being hit with a taxicab.

Langford is nearly blind now. He has been eking out a bare existence doing odd jobs around Harlem.

By many boxing experts, he is considered the greatest fighter ever to pull on a glove.

WHITE New Leader

Princeton, N. J. (AP)—It's probable that the name White will be a big one in Princeton athletics for the next few years. Application

Made for New Track in Rhody

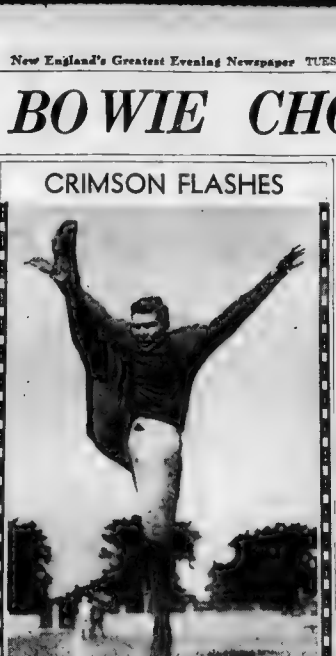
Narragansett, R. I., Nov. 19 —The Narragansett Pier Chamber of Commerce announced it would have a representative at the taxpayers' meeting Saturday to request that body to ask the General Assembly to permit dog racing here.

The Chamber's plan, if permission is granted, is to buy a strip of land near Sherry's Beach at a cost of $20,000 and erect a track there.

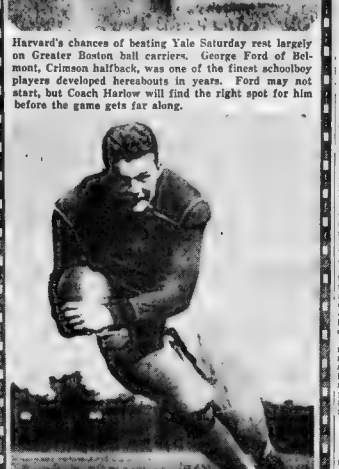
A spokesman for the C. of C. said something had to be done to popularize the beach and that the organization believed dog racing would turn the trick.

At present dog racing is not allowed anywhere in Rhode Island.

CRIMSON FLASHES



Harvard's chances of beating Yale Saturday rest largely on Greater Boston ball carriers. George Ford of Belmont, Crimson halfback, was one of the finest schoolboy players developed hereabouts in years. Ford may not start, but Coach Harlow will find the right spot for him before the game gets far along.



George Hedblom of Chicago takes his hat off to no one in the Crimson backfield. Hedblom's only handicap is lack of weight. He's a glutton for work, one of those fellows who loves the thrill of contact. A main threat against the Elis.

Thomas J. Bilodeau carried Boston Latin School to city football honors. Now he is in there playing quarterback for Harvard. Susceptible to injuries, Bilodeau is now rounding into fine form.

BRIGGS Heads TIGERS

EXERCISES OPTION

By International News Service

Detroit, Nov. 19—Walter O. Briggs, prominent manufacturer, today became the sole owner of the World's Champion Detroit Tigers with announcement he would purchase half interest in the club owned by Frank J. Navin, who died last Wednesday. Briggs owned the other half.

Briggs had an option to buy in the event of Navin's death, and today from his winter residence at Miami Beach, Fla., he authorized announcement he would exercise this option.

No mention was made of Billy Evans, who resigned as business manager of the Cleveland Indians yesterday, and who, it was reported, would take over direction of the Tigers.

In Ill Health

But the ownership of the club by Briggs will not, baseball experts said, exclude the possibility that Evans may become general manager. If anything, it strengthened it. Briggs has been in ill health, and he probably will need an active general manager.

Briggs made known his intention to become the sole owner in a five paragraph statement released here by Charles F. Navin, secretary and treasurer of the club.

Sports writers were called to Navin Field, the home of the Tigers, this morning, and handed the statement without comment. In it, Briggs revealed the agreement with Frank J. Navin which antedated the latter's death.

Through the exercise of his option, Briggs became the real czar of the destinies of the Tigers, as he now owns all stock. The amount of money Frank Navin's 50 per cent of stock will cost him was not known, nor was there any mention of money in the statement.

Speculation over ownership and managership of the Tigers has been rife since Navin was stricken with a heart attack while horseback riding last Wednesday. Frye reports said Cochrane would assume the presidency, and later it was rumored that Mrs. Navin, the widow, might take charge.

Denies Report

However, Evans' resignation from the Cleveland Indians was believed to have been the first intimation of what would happen to the world champions. Many insisted that he would become general manager of the Tigers, but Charles Navin, when told of the reports, said:

"That is news to me. I do not know anything about it."

FREDDIE MILLER REAL RING CHAMP

BUSIEST MAN IN GAME

By Damon Runyon
(Copyright, 1935, by Universal Service)

New York, Nov. 19—One of the greatest little fighters in the world today is Freddie Miller, of Cincinnati, recognized all over Europe and in most of these United States as the featherweight champion.

Yet Miller has yet to be seen in New York, except in small clubs a couple of years ago.

We never attempted to tell matchmakers their business, but here is a somewhat inexplicable case—a valuable drawing card loose on the market, and never a bid from the big town.

Johnny Attell, at Dyckman oval last summer, and Jimmy Johnston, at Madison Square Garden last Friday night, demonstrated that there is plenty of excitement among the little fellows, both using the same event with Sixto Escobar and Lou Salica, and backing it up with youngsters in about the same class.

Escobar won the bantamweight title Friday night that Salica took from him at the oval last summer, and the Garden bout in speed and thrills was a replica of Attell's open air presentation.

Both battles had the spectators cheering after nearly every round.

If the bantams are that good, there must be new interest concealed in the featherweight division, especially with a champion like Miller, and we would like to see the Cincinnati lad in action hereabouts, if only for the novelty of the thing.

TOURED EUROPE

Miller has an amazing record. He has fought over a wider stretch of country than any other fighter of modern times, and in this fighting he has whipped the best man in his class in half a dozen different countries.

Last year, for example, he began the year by fighting in his home town on New Year's Day and continuing through eight different states to California.

Then he fought in Liverpool Manchester, Newcastle, London. He appeared in Wales and Scotland and popped over to Barcelona, Spain.

He wound up the year by fighting Panama Al Brown in Paris the night before Christmas, winning a 15-round decision.

Then through 1935, he went back over much of the same European territory, finally returning home a short time ago.

He has had 12 battles since coming back to the United States and won them all.

Miller is a southpaw, and perhaps the greatest southpaw since Lew Tendler, of Philadelphia, a crack lightweight of a few years ago.

Miller has come along in a day when the featherweight opposition is not so hot.

The 1934 rating of the experts had the Cincinnati boy on top, and below him were Baby Arizmendi, Mike Belloise, Nel Tarlston, of England, Petey Hayes, Seaman Watson, of England, Lew Rodak, Tommy Paul, George Hansford and Petey Sarrow.

So rapidly does the fistic picture change, some of these have gone out of the division, and others have faded from public attention. Miller remains the outstanding man in the lot.

Arizmendi seems to be moving into the lightweight division and is looking for a match with Canzoneri.

Arizmendi was once recognized by the New York Boxing Commission as a species of champion as far as this state is concerned, but it is understood that because of his inactivity, the commission is now prepared to recognize Miller.

This will make Freddie world champion beyond any dispute, a recognition that seems coming to him on the strength of his astonishing activity.

Harvard '11

Favored in Ticket Draws

Harvard '11 was favored in the ticket draw for the Harvard-Yale game, Ticket Manager Carroll Getchell of the H. A. A. announced today.

Second on the list were the classes from 1871-1895. The war class of 1917 was third. Last year's class, 1935, was at the bottom of the list.

Following the top trio were the classes of 1929, 1921, 1933, 1910, 1926, 1916, 1896, 1931, 1927, 1905, 1899, 1913, 1919, 1918, 1922, 1918, 1901, 1900, 1932, 1898, 1895, 1897, 1903, 1928, 1906, 1904, 1908, 1923, 1915, 1909, 1914, 1907, 1920, 1930, 1912, 1936, 1936.

Mr. Boston

Braddock, Gob Seek Louis Go

—By JACK CONWAY—

PERSONAL observations. "Bomber" Joe Louis, who boxes exhibitions against [illegible] tonight, is a distinctive type of fighter in the age when most ring men are cautious. He says he will box all comers and he means it.

Louis has never been hurt by an opponent's punches since he turned professional. As an amateur, he took his share of punishment, but always came back fighting.

Mr. Boston.

Johnny Mar[illegible] some of Louis' bouts in the amateurs, and he once told me the "Brown Bomber" had plenty [illegible]age as well as ring ability. Martin saw Louis fight back even when handicapped by an injured hand.

Jack Blackburn will be with Louis at Providence tonight. Blackburn has had much to do with making the Detroit heavyweight such a masterful boxer. He has schooled him thoroughly in the fundamentals of boxing. Louis is not easy to hit, while he does not leave his own punches fly until he has openings for them.

Against Baer, Louis jabbed with his left to the face until he had Max bewildered. He then hooked with his left to the head and body. When Baer started to stumble and drop his hands, Louis whipped his right to the jaw. It was a perfect exhibition of boxing as well as of punching.

BRADDOCK

JIMMY Braddock doesn't intend to risk his title until he meets Louis. Joe Gould, the champion's manager, makes this fact clear in a fiery statement issued on the Coast.

"I am going to keep Braddock out of a title bout," Gould told me when he was in Boston last Summer. "Our contract with the Garden calls for Jimmy to get 45 per cent for a championship bout.

"Louis will draw more money than anybody else. It is a million dollar shot. Forty-five per cent of a million iron men is $450,000. We might even be able to get a 50 per cent cut.

"Why should Braddock risk his title against any other contender? There is always the danger of meeting defeat in the ring, and if Braddock should lose we intend to get the most possible money for the bout.

"It isn't any cinch Louis will beat Braddock. Jimmy won't stand off at long range like Baer did. He will rush to close quarters and barrage with both hands to the head and body. Maybe Louis cannot take it. If this is true, Braddock will find it out in the first round."

If Louis were to meet Braddock today, he would be a 10 to 3 favorite in the betting. The "Brown Bomber" has been built so high by sports writers and fans that he is considered unbeatable.

I hope Louis does not believe all the complimentary things that have been said and written about him. If he does, he is liable to let down in his training. In such an event, he would encounter serious trouble when he meets Braddock.

SHARKEY

IF JACK Sharkey's comeback is a success, he may get a crack at Louis before the latter signs to meet Braddock. It would be a strange twist of Fate if Sharkey at the age of 33 were to burst the Louis bubble.

Sharkey has always done exceptionally well against boxers he thought he could defeat. He was certain he could win from Harry Wills, George Godfrey, Jim Maloney, Tommy Loughran, Young Stribbling, Max Schmeling and other heavyweights he licked. He feels much the same in regard to Louis.

Sharkey believes he can beat Louis with a left hand attack. The Sharkey who beat Wills would undoubtedly have upset Louis, but it is an open question whether Sharkey can now get himself into the necessary fighting form to down the "Brown Bomber."

Three or four bouts against second flight heavyweights will give the answer to Sharkey's ring status.

Unknown Winston should furnish Sharkey with a severe test at the Garden on Friday night. Winston is young, strong, a good puncher and a fair boxer. He has been boxing regularly and should compel Sharkey to set a fast pace if he is to win.

Sharkey is down to 200 pounds, and is punching lightning fast. He has a keen interest in his comeback, and is confident it will end with a victory over Louis.

Winston Forecasts Win Over Sharkey

Dusky Star In Town

TALKS FIGHT PLANS WITH JOE LOUIS

By Sam Cohen

Eddie "Unknown" Winston, dusky Hartford thumper, arrived in Boston today and established headquarters at Kelley and Hayes' gymnasium.

There he will put the finishing touches to his training for a ten-round bout with Jack Sharkey at the Boston Garden Friday evening.

Winston appeared in excellent physical condition upon his arrival and announced that nothing short of a knockout victory is his goal.

"This is the biggest opportunity of my career," said Winston. "I thought I was going to get into the big money when I licked Ernie Schaaf, but I was left out in the cold.

"They'll have to give me recognition if I lick Sharkey."

Winston thinks Joe Louis is the greatest fighter that ever lived and he has greatly resented the attitude Sharkey has taken toward his colored brother.

"Sharkey might have licked Wills and Godfrey, but he'll never see the day he can lick Joe Lewis," said Winston. "In fact, his alleged supremacy over colored heavyweights will be all over Friday, because I'll knock him off."

Winston is planning a secret meeting with Joe Louis, who is scheduled to appear in an exhibition at Providence tonight. This meeting is supposed to result in a plan of battle that will cinch victory for Winston.

HEAVY HITTERS

Knockout punches will fly all evening when the Goodwin A. C. stages its Friday show.

In the eight round semi-final Clayton Settino of Dorchester will clash with Tiger Terry Warrenton.

They met once before, and Warrenton, after being on the floor twice for counts of nine, came back and knocked out Settino, who had scored 14 straight previous K. O.'s.

Heavyweights will feature six rounders. Frankie Conne[illegible], Sharkey's stablemate, clashes with Joe Urdavanis of Haverhill; Matty Bloom of Revere again battles Eddie Gates of Pittsfield, while Al Mnnchan of Brockton, one of Sharkey's sparring partners, takes on Wade Lumpkin of Hartford.

Dick Hogan, N. E. amateur golden glove heavyweight champion, will make his pro bow in a four rounder with Ralph Smith.

Kelly Is Winner At Arena

Roy Kelly of Brookline, recent Golden Glove victor, won a three-round decision over Alex Belushko of Cambridge in the feature bout of the first eliminations in the Irish-American A. A. diamond belt tournament before 3000 spectators at the Arena.

Belushko was last year's state middleweight champion.

The most surprising fighter on the program was George Martin of Boston, who, in his first major tournament took the 147-pound event, winning three bouts.

The summary of final bouts:

118-Pound Class—Bobby Joyce, South Boston, beat Charles Little, Roxbury.
135-Pound Class—Mike Pancsyk, Chelsea, beat Ralph Looper, Beverly.
175-Pound Class—Roy Kelly, Brookline, beat Alex Belushko, Cambridge.

What a singer! It's Jack Sharkey, bellowing a song of glee in the shower after a fast workout for his Friday night match at the Garden with Unknown Winston. The ex-sailor is in better condition for his comeback than before he lost the world heavy title to Carnera. He weighed 205 then, he's below 200 now. And says he feels fit to fight wildcats.

Harvard Lineup Puzzles Harlow

Has 20 Good Men For 11 Positions

Backfield Big Problem

"The 11 best football players on any squad, whether playing in position or not, constitute the best football team."

That has been Dick Harlow's gridiron coaching creed since his first term as an assistant at Penn State in 1912. That was his creed at Colgate and Western Maryland.

Today as he approaches his first Yale game as head coach of the Harvard varsity, his big problem is still, as it has been all season, to place the eleven best players at his call in the [illegible].

PLETHORA

It's really a [illegible] for the first [illegible] year Harlow's squad [illegible] quality of dep[illegible] first time since the season's inception, Harlow has more than one player for each position.

As a result of constant jockeying made neces[illegible] the season by injuries, there are 20 players considered on a par for the 11 starting positions.

Graham [illegible] handicapped [illegible] be considered a fa[illegible]

Bob Knapp at end and Bill Burton at tackle.

Two factors will act to determine Harlow's [illegible] selection [illegible] offen[illegible] his plan to check Yale's forward passing attack.

The latter will require that Harlow play [illegible] best pass defenders, who are Vernon Struck, George Backwood, Don Jackson and Johnny Adzigian, with George Ford and Leo Ecker, both sizable lads, to be considered in the selection of the w[illegible]backs.

If Harlow chooses to play a running game [illegible] start as much pre[illegible] upon the Yale front [illegible] Harvard's [illegible] backs are Jackson, Struck, Adzigian, Hedblom, [illegible] Moseley and Ford with Backwood always fitting into the picture as the best and hardest blocker on the squad.

KICKERS

If it is to be a passing game, Harvard's best passer is Adzigian. After Adzigian come Ford, Moseley and Hedblom.

Jackson, figured at the start of the season to be a good passer, has been handicapped by his shoulder [illegible].

Jackson, however, remains the [illegible] best receiver [illegible] powerful back with sure hands and easy to start. Moseley is the most dangerous, completing a pass in the open, for he is a shifty touchdown runner beyond the line of scrimmage.

Into consideration must come ability to kick. In this respect [illegible], Ford and Ecker stand [illegible]

B. C. to Visit Sandy Burr; Hanley Remakes B. U. Team

By Walter Riley

Sandy Burr Country Club in Wayland has again been selected by Boston College as its pre-Holy Cross game retreat.

The group will go to Sandy Burr immediately after dinner a week from tomorrow night and remain until Saturday morning, day of the game.

Thanksgiving Day will be climaxed by a turkey dinner and a program of entertainment will lift the tension from the minds of the players on Friday.

Harry Downes is pointing for the Purple game, but he is not making the mistake of taking Boston University lightly.

SLOW STARTERS

He realizes the Terriers will trot out every trick in the bag gambling all on winning their last game, one which would top off the best B. U. season since the war.

John Curley, graduate manager of athletics at University Heights is author of the suggestion that Downes hold a pre-game scrimmage of 15 minutes before both the B. U. and Holy Cross games.

The remark was intended as a joke. But in the light of the way in which the Eagles have taken a period or two to get the feel of recent games with Michigan State, Providence, Western Maryland, New Hampshire and Springfield, the plan really carries merit.

Those first 15 minutes have proved costly to Boston College all season.

Pat Hanley is having his own troubles in the Terrier camp at Riverside.

Hanley was dissatisfied with the showing of his team against Brown, so much so that he is taking the team apart.

Dick Van Iderstine and Frank Hughes, regular ends, are the only certain starters in the line.

Bodger Carroll May Quit Beverly Post After Salem Game

By Will Connell

Pointing for the grand finale against Salem is Beverly this week, as Thanksgiving offensive plans are shaped by Coach Edward "Bodger" Carroll.

A win over Salem, not very probable but possible, would make this a quite successful year for Beverly, hence the current tune up drive.

Beverly and Coach Carroll have had their headaches this fall. The team shaped up in preseason charts as capable, though no champion.

Then, before Carroll took over coaching in early September, five boys were hurt in pre-school scrimmages. The varsity center, an end and a back were among the five, so Beverly was in a bad spot before the season was underway.

Since then the team did well, considering handicaps, winning three, tying two, and losing four.

It lost to Lynn Classical, Peabody, Marblehead and Lynn English, defeating Amesbury, Danvers and Gloucester, and held Haverhill and Newburyport even.

On that record, you'd wonder how the pack now howling on Carroll's heels justifies its stand. Classical, Peabody and Marblehead simply were better teams with more material, and English was an even bet.

Holding powerful Haverhill and beating Gloucester prove that Beverly had been well prepared.

If Carroll retires as coach, as is more than possible, he won't have to alibi at all for this season's showing. He has done good work, since accepting the Beverly call several years ago after years of marked success with little St. James high in Haverhill.

This fall his main ground gaining asset has been the punting of fullback John Malone, who has in games kicked more than 60 yards.

Lawrence Howard, one of the injured five now back in harness, and Hugh Nelson are varsity halfbacks, with Tom Murphy quarterback.

Murphy, a senior, never played football and reported only in mid-September, yet earned the pilot's job.

Joe DeVincenzo, one of the dented quintet, was out five weeks with a broken leg, but has taken over left end for the windup. Bill Murphy is the other end.

Angelo Ambrefi and Harry Ball, tackles, have been the line aces all season. Ray Boniface and Lawrence Bettencourt are guards, and Dave Murphy, brother to Bill, center.

Brian Hansbury, who might have been varsity pilot, has been idle all fall with the injured brigade. John "Pete" Malloy and Ken Frost, ends; Harry Trowt, basketball captain, tackle; and Roger Coleman, guard, rank close to the first team.

LEWIS HANEY ON INDUSTRY

Business Indexes SHOW RECENT GAINS Are Maintained

By LEWIS HANEY
Professor of Economics, New York University

New York, Nov. 19.—Examinations of various business indexes shows that, on the whole, recent gains are being held and that, considering the season, further progress is being made. We may say that industrial activity is greater than at any time since the first inflation spurt of the summer of 1933. With that exception, it is the greatest since 1930.

Furthermore, there is nothing in early prospect to prevent further gains. Plenty of clouds may be noted on the distant horizon, but they may blow over. At the worst, the "breathing spell" is a grateful reality.

Steel production continues to fluctuate at a level well above 50 per cent of capacity. A number of special situations, such as the new seasonal spurt in motor production, and the beer can business, have helped.

But lack of these things is the gradual expansion in building, the largest in machine tool orders, and renewed interest in railway maintenance and renewals. Probably the new Canadian tariff adjustment will help steel.

Steel production seems likely to be well maintained over the last quarter, and to start a spring rise from the highest year-end level since 1930.

The weekly output of automobiles continues to increase, which suggests a good volume of sales following the motor shows. With winter weather and accumulating "trade ins," some slowing up is to be expected, but the new motor year has an auspicious start.

The textile industries are active, and last week's cotton cloth production figures rose. Wool manufacturers have heavy unfilled orders and are rushed with government buying.

The lumber manufacturers, however, find that they have been overproducing, and some curtailment is under way. The new Canadian adjustment will hurt some.

The most difficult item to understand is the backwardness of railway carloadings.

These declined again last week, and the decline was more than usual for the period. Moreover, it was due to heavy declines in miscellaneous freight and ore shipments. Unless this condition changes soon, we will have to look for some slowing up in production in order to keep the industrial output in line with shipments.

Urban retail trade has shown some response to more seasonable weather but continued spotty last week, with New York stores probably behind a year ago in their sales.

Factory payrolls have increased, however, and farm purchasing power is greater. As the tardy and messy PWA army gets mobilized, therefore, retail trade should pick up.

Commodity price movements during the week as a whole were evenly divided in number between advances and declines, but the averages rose. The wholesale prices of cotton, cotton yarn, worsted, flour were higher. Declines occurred in pine lumber, and in such international commodities as sugar, silk, rubber, tin and hides.

Certainly no signs of active inflation have appeared recently in commodity prices. Even the much advertised mark-up in steel prices hangs fire.

Outstanding news items were as follows:

The Canadian tariff pact was signed. This will cause some confusion and necessarily hurt some industries. Although doubting the wisdom of the dictatorial power assumed by the administration, the nation will doubtless approve closer trade relations with Canada and hope that the gains will offset the losses.

LANDON Views on ECONOMY TO RAISE LIVING STANDARDS

By Merryle Stanley Rukeyser
Copyright, 1935, By Universal Service

Topeka, Kas., Nov. 19—This prairie capital appears to have become the cynosure of the eyes of the American people, who have been seeking the measure of Alf M. Landon, Kansas' budget-balancing governor.

On my second pilgrimage to the Governor's house within the month, I found Landon sticking to his knitting as Governor of Kansas, letting political adversaries and advocates on the outside worry about whether he constitutes presidential timber.

Governor Landon envisages public economy as a means to an end, rather than the end-all and the be-all of his policies. He believes that a great country, like ours, can stand much abuse in the form of mistaken policies, yet he thinks that chronic financial imprudence would be fatal in its effects.

Accordingly, his programme of fiscal prudence in the management of public affairs is intended to assure the possibility of continuance of the American dream in raising popular living standards. Likewise, on the humanitarian side, Landon believes that the relief problem may endure for a time, and believes that public officers should release public resources for human relief through eliminating waste and extravagance in carrying on the normal functions of government.

Emphasizes

He is not satisfied with mere inexpensive government, but wants through improved management to get the tax dollar to go further.

Likewise, in grappling with the economic problems of the period, Governor Landon recognizes the desirability of a positive approach, and does not wish to be thought of merely as a professional anti-New Dealer.

He emphasizes the need of distinguishing between the objectives of certain new federal laws and the character of their administration.

Moreover, in relief matters and otherwise, he has sought actively to co-operate with the federal government, ignoring party differences. In fact, he has continued in Kansas the relief director appointed by his Democratic predecessor.

In view of the continued expressions of satisfaction by federal officials with the Kansas relief setup, friends of the governor in Kansas were surprised by the recent outbursts of Harry Hopkins, federal relief administrator, to the effect that the state of Kansas hasn't contributed a thin dime to the needy.

PROBING Mortgage BONDS STEUER TO INVESTIGATE

By Universal Service

New York, Nov. 19 — Federal probes of bond and mortgage company activities pushed ahead vigorously today on two fronts.

Max D. Steuer, it was learned, had been engaged as special counsel by the Sabath congressional committee to investigate such of the bond and mortgage companies whose affairs have come to the committee's attention, as he may select.

Simultaneously, at the request of Walter Brower, special assistant to Attorney General Cummings, a special federal grand jury was empaneled to hear evidence against the Bond & Mortgage Guarantee Company.

From Brower's investigations thus far five indictments have been found against some companies and officers and employees.

Brower will be assisted in the presentation of evidence to the grand jury by Bernard J. Tompkins, assistant U. S. attorney, and C. Agnes McHugh, special attorney in the Department of Justice.

Evidence

The evidence uncovered by Steuer will be submitted to the Sabath committee at public hearings which will probably start early in December at Washington.

Federal jurisdiction in the mortgages company investigation is obtained through the fact that the companies used the mails in the transaction of their business.

The Sabath committee is not a prosecuting agency. The data which it is expected Steuer will uncover will be embodied in a report to Congress. Later it will be placed in the hands of the attorney general.

Steuer's entrance into the mortgage investigation follows his earlier activity when he volunteered his services to the thousands of mortgage certificate holders who were caught when the companies defaulted. Steuer is serving the Sabath committee without fee.

An earlier indictment, returned by the federal grand jury, following Brower's investigations, which named the New York Title and Mortgage Company, resulted in two motions argued today before Federal Judge Francis G. Caffey.

BOND OFFERING

Canadian Utilities 'A'

Public offering of $2,450,000 first mortgage 20-year 5 per cent bonds, Series "A," of Canadian Utilities, Limited, will be made today through an underwriting group composed of E. H. Rollins & Sons, Inc., Burr & Company, Inc., and Chandler & Company, Inc. The bonds are priced at 93¾ per cent, plus accrued interest.

The offering does not represent new financing by Canadian Utilities, Limited, as the bonds are outstanding securities which have been owned by a parent company, Dominion Gas and Electric Company, which will receive the net proceeds from the sale.

The Series "A" bonds were originally issued as part of a re-arrangement of the capital structure of Canadian Utilities, Limited, coincident with the acquisition by it of all of the property of Union Power Company, Limited.

They are dated September 1, 1935, mature September 1, 1955, and are subject to redemption at any time at premiums ranging from 5 per cent up to September 1, 1940, to 2 per cent after September 1, 1950. The bonds will have the benefit of a maintenance, retirement and improvement fund which will be used either for the purchase or retirement of the bonds, or for the acquisition of additional physical property.

Canadian Utilities, Limited, is an operating public utility company supplying electrical energy in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, Canada.

Combined electric power sales of the company and Union Power Company, Limited, according to a statement included in the prospectus, were $1,029,454 for the year ended August 31, 1935, compared with $996,817 for the calendar year 1934.

Combined operating income, after depreciation, for the year ended August 31, 1935, amounted to $302,193 against $301,317 for the year 1934.

MOSCOW SEEKS Loan in England

London, Nov. 19 (INS) — Moscow is negotiating for credits on a large scale in the English market, according to an article published today in the Daily Herald, organ of the Labor party.

TICKER TALK

Alcohol or liquor shares are the outstanding week spots. The selling followed announcement of the new tariff treaty with Canada which proposes a 20 per cent reduction in the duty on whiskies aged four years or more. Wall Street fears this will force down prices of the newer whiskies and for a time adversely affect earnings of American distillers.

Other weak groups were the farm equipments, foods, glass shares, motors, oils, railroads, steels and rubbers. Most of these, however, had been strong in the morning and early afternoon.

The rail equipment, tobacco and metal shares managed to retain most of their gains, and finished higher with the public utilities.

Du Pont declared its expected extra dividend as a result of the recent "melon" voted by General Motors, in which it has a major investment. The form the dividend took was a surprise, however, directors voting a distribution of one fifty-fifth of a share of General Motors common for each of Du Pont held.

This figures out to be worth around $1.05 a share, which is better than Wall Street had expected. Expectations were for a 50 cents cash extra in addition to the regular 80 cents dividend. The stock to be distributed was purchased in the last year or so by du Pont, and in no way disturbed its permanent investment in Motors of some 10,000,000 shares.

BOSTON HAS Larger Imports

Collector Maynard reports imports at Boston the week ended November 16 were $2,635,574, against $1,731,065 a year before, and duties collected were $772,631, against $344,187; since July 1 duties collected were $9,897,155, against $6,694,739.

Wool imports the week ended November 16 were 2,342,804 pounds, against none a year before.

COMEBACK Agricultural Equipment Needed

Although industrial stocks listed on security exchanges have lately advanced, on the average, to the highest level in some years, there are certain groups of stocks that stand out for their more-than-average performance.

This chart shows the trend of one such group, that of the agricultural implement stocks. The companies represented are J. I. Case, International-Harvester, Deere & Co. are Massey-Harris.

From a 1929 peak of 445, these stocks, indexed by Standard Statistics, with 1926 equal to 100, reached a low of 41 in 1932. In October of this year they recovered to 176, highest since May, 1931.

What accounts for this sharp comeback? One reason is the general improvement in securities. A more important reason, however, is the improvement in the farmer. Since implement companies are in business to sell tractors, threshers, harvesters and many other large and small items for the farm, the financial condition of the farmer is the basic factor.

When the farmer was receiving a goodly sum for his labor and commodities prior to the depression, the implement companies did good business. The depression cut into farm income, and the farmer necessarily cut down his purchases.

The farm once more comes in for a larger share of the work, as the farmer found Dobby less expensive.

Farm income in the last three years has increased steadily, aided by government benefit payments.

Thus, once again the farmer finds himself financially able to buy modern equipment. Earnings of farm implement makers and therefore their stocks are reflecting this situation.

Bond Market Trend Mixed

By Associated Press

New York, Nov. 19—Business in the bond market was slower today, with price changes narrow over the major part of the list.

During the early trading buying orders appeared slightly heavier than the selling operations and the result was a considerable number of small gains in rail and miscellaneous corporate classifications.

U. S. Governments continued within very narrow bounds, though the list had a somewhat better tone yesterday.

Dividend

American Light & Traction Co. declared a dividend of 30 cents on the common, payable February 1 to stock of record January 15. Similar amounts were paid in previous quarters.

LOCAL Leaders WARY BANCROFT CITES VIEWS

By State Streeter

While acknowledged leaders in the Boston financial district find the upswing in security markets most encouraging, they have by no means abandoned caution

Today James R. Bancroft, president of the American Institute of Finance stresses the advisability of going slowly and carefully under existing conditions.

Mr. Bancroft suggests investors remember, "Some of the factors which have caused much uncertainty in the past have by no means been eliminated."

A policy of cutting down rather than extending commitments during periods of strength appeals to the Boston economist.

For the long range Mr. Bancroft is inclined to take a hopeful view of the capital goods industries but adds:

"Without a real change in the fiscal policies of the government, without some form of definite assistance in the rails—in deeds rather than words—and without evidence of a definite change in the political attitude towards the utilities, it is difficult to visualize an early marked increase."

Sellers Absent

Another prominent figure in the Boston financial district also prefers to remain anonymous sees little slackening of the upward rush of security prices.

He says, "Occasional selling flurries are to be expected in any bull market. But the strong position of clients accounts leads to the belief a liquidating wave at this time would not progress very far."

He acknowledged the existence of a large delinquency of market skeptics but this encourages rather than deters him in his bullishness.

For the believers, "That some time they will be converted to the constructive side of the market seems only additional impetus to the rise as they belatedly place buying orders."

Not wishing, as with so many other brokers committed to rising prices, the fundamental story of no weakly held accounts measuring present price levels is the root of cheerfulness.

To vision a selling wave of frightening proportions it is first necessary to locate the sellers.

And unless the present trade picture changes radically for the worse Stein street brokers do not believe there is any danger of large investment holders dumping their securities.

READJUSTMENT Plan of Capital

Container Co. of America has announced a capital readjustment plan calling for an authorized issue of 1,000,000 shares of common stock, $20 par.

Each present share of preferred is to be exchanged for five shares of common; each share of Class A common to be exchanged for one share of common, and each share of Class B common to be exchanged for two-fifths of a share of common.

STATE ST. COMMENT

Here's Ltd.—We note that the new dealers have decided that the time is ripe to cut federal expenditures by a half billion dollars. This proposed saving together with half a billion additional revenue for the fiscal year 1937, which the treasury department expects if business trends continue upward, will lop off a billion dollars from the deficit, thus enabling the administration to balance the budget in the fiscal year, 1938. We sincerely hope this most desirable result can be accomplished.

Paine, Webber & Co.—If volume dries up on further selling today another mild rally could easily follow. At this writing, however, it appears dubious that such a rally would mark the beginning of another upward leg in the general list.

Hornblower & Weeks—When the rails last week advanced fractionally above their high levels of last September, thereby duplicating the action of the industrials, the major character of the recovery movement was further substantiated.

Josephthal & Co.—The labor situation in the steel and automobile industries came in for a little more discussion in certain quarters. We did the possible effect of the used car situation on retail automobile sales over the next month or two.

Boston & Albany

Boston & Albany Railroad Co. declared the usual quarterly dividend of $2.25 a share due at this time, payable December 31 to stock of record November 30.

Bond Maturities

New York, Nov. 19—Corporate bond maturities during December will total $65,859,500 compared with $38,745,500 in November, the Standard Statistics Co. reports. January maturities are estimated at $114,129,100.

CHARLES A. COLLINS

Fifty YEARS IN State St.

By Hugh E. Bradshaw

Charles A. Collins, former president of the Boston Stock Exchange, is observing his fiftieth anniversary in the State St. district.

Aside from length, his career in and around State Street is notable because he has been connected with a firm which represents a continuing business for more than 51 years. First employed on November 19, 1885, by Charles S. Purinton, a dealer in investment securities, he became a partner 15 years later. On Mr Purinton's retirement in 1907, the business was carried on under the name of Collins, Spalding & Co. Later changed to Collins, Spalding & Breed, and at present Collins, Breed & Co. Mr. Collins acquired Mr Purinton's stock exchange membership in 1905 and was elected president of the local board in 1933, and served in that capacity until this year.

With investors and traders bombarded on all sides by credit inflation propaganda many had come to believe that any expansion was dangerous in the extreme. And probably spelt ruin. Consequently it is reassuring to read the United Business Service of Boston bulletin this week and find that dangerous credit expansion—inflation—comes when debts are increased faster than paying power. This is not the situation at the moment. And just so long as the amortization principle, the gradual payment of loans, rules business it does not appear that we need to worry.

Notebook: Reliable sources indicate to us that there is a cumulation of evidence that consumer incomes are rising . . . And trade opportunities should improve . . . United States figures, as estimated by Brookmire, call for an increase of 18 per cent over last year during the next six months . . . That tricky duPont dividend was most unexpected . . . And small holders will have quite a time putting fifty-fifths of General Motors together to get a full share.

The market impression we gather from conversations with brokers, tape action and chart performance is that a session or two of rest is to be expected in here. After that a renewal of the upswing, with rail shares and specialties out in front. One of the more cautious New York advisory services sends us word today that on any dip it will tell clients to buy up to 75 per cent of resources . . . This strikes us as particularly good advice especially if volume dries up as it has on previous days.

Bits O' Gossip: Low priced shares are being sought rather vigorously . . . Indicative of a wider public following than in some time . . . We hear Barnsdall around 12½, Bridgeport Brass at 16, Bullard about 24 and Canadian Pacific near 12 mentioned . . . Servel at 13½ will have friends . . . So will Goodrich at 12 . . . And they say anyone who has ever bought Anaconda in the 20's has seen a big appreciation on his investment in every boom period . . . General Cable hardly off its low, in bull market terms, looks attractive.

Members of the Boston Stock Exchange responded so enthusiastically to the news Richard Whitney and two associates would be in Boston Friday to lead an informal discussion of trading practices that a change in plans has been necessary. So many signified their intention of attending that it has been decided to hold the meeting on the third floor of the Exchange Club instead of in the bond room of the stock exchange as previously proposed.

STOCKS Close FIRM

TRADERS CAUTIOUS

New York, Nov. 19—Stocks pressed cautiously forward in the face of considerable profit taking in an active session today.

Although many of the recent leaders were sluggish, selective buying pulled up rail equipments, merchandising, alcohol, miscellaneous utilities, and specialty shares. Grains and cotton were firm in late trading.

Issues up 1½ to 3 points included Dupont, Westinghouse Airbrake, Westinghouse Electric, Timken, Schenley, U. S. Industrial Alcohol, American Telephone, People Gas, Union Pacific, and Great Northern Preferred.

Dividend news continued to brace the market. Coincident with buying of coppers, Kennecott announced a quarterly dividend of 20 cents a share, compared with 15 cents a quarter previously.

Associated Dry Goods made a new high for the recovery, as Lord and Taylor, one of its principal units, announced the usual $5 extra dividend. Tubize Chatillon resumed dividends on its 7 per cent preferred with a $1.75 quarterly.

Schenley advanced on news of a preferred issue, which will not be convertible into common as some common holders had feared.

Timely Events

Retail sales in various sections of the country were said to have picked up substantially during the past few days, with colder weather the principal factor.

In line with the recent extremely warm weather, early estimates of freight car loadings for the past week indicate a decline to around 620,000 cars from 653,525 in the previous week.

While this drop would be more than seasonal, the total would still be ahead of last year's corresponding week. Loadings in the current week were expected to show a sharp increase, due to the demand for coal.

A greater public participation in equities dealings was seen in the condition statement of weekly reporting Federal Reserve member banks which reported that loans to brokers in New York city for the week ended Nov. 13 were up $19,000,000 from the preceding seven days.

At the beginning of foreign exchange transactions, sterling was off ½ of a cent at $4.92 and the French franc was .00⅛ of a cent firmer at 6.59 cents.

U. S. Exporters To Be Aided

By Associated Press.

Washington, Nov. 19—The Export-Import Bank announced today it was prepared to give financial assistance to American exporters whose returns on sales to Brazil have been held up by currency restrictions imposed by that country.

Between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000 in balances due American business men has been "blocked" there because Brazil [illegible] to raise sufficient foreign currency.

Measures adopted by the Export-Import Bank are:

1—An agreement to purchase from creditors Brazilian government refunding notes to a total of $17,000,000. The purchase will be limited to 60 per cent of the creditors' holdings.

2—An agreement to accept the remaining 40 per cent as partial security for cash advances for future exports sold on credit in Brazil or any other foreign country.

WHEAT MART Moves Lower

Chicago, Nov. 19 (AP)—Influenced by Liverpool quotations lower than expected, the Chicago wheat market underwent an early sag today. For the time being, speculative demand in wheat here was confined to price dips.

Opening ¼-⅜ down, December 96½, Chicago wheat futures then kept near to this level. Corn started unchanged to ⅛ off, December 59⅞-60, and afterward rallied a little.

N. E. TELEPHONE To Pay Dividend

At a meeting of the directors of the New England Telephone & Telegraph Company held in Boston on November 19, 1935, a dividend of $1.50 per share was declared, payable on Tuesday, December 31, 1935, to stockholders of record at the close of business on Thursday, December 10, 1935.

Oil Output Gains

Daily average production of crude oil in the United States in week ended November 16 totaled 2,872,754 barrels, an increase of 56,740 barrels over the preceding week, according to the Oil & Gas Journal.

New York, Nov. 19 (AP)—Bar silver steady and unchanged at 65⅜.

Eating TREATY PIE Proof

By B. C. Forbes

The proof of the Canadian treaty pie will be in the eating of it.

The pie is so big, it contains so many slices, that it is impossible to masticate and digest it all at once.

Doubtless there will be squawks. Doubtless various domestic interests will feel jeopardized. Doubtless, also, the arrangement will actually inflict some hardships.

But it may be that the total expansion in two-way trade will work out advantageously for both nations.

One very real danger is that the policy of granting to all other most-favored nations every concession granted to Canada may bring about entirely unforeseen developments, advantageous neither to Canada nor America, but distinctly harmful to America.

It is one thing to enter into a give-and-take tariff plan with Canada but quite another thing to confer all the advantages or such a plan on every other nation.

After all, standards of living in Canada and the United States are largely similar. The same blood runs in the veins of both peoples. They have like ethics. Propinquity and intercourse have brought them closely together in understanding and aspiration. Indeed, the average Canadian probably feels that he has more in common with the average American than he has with the average Englishman.

Looking far ahead, and pondering the evolution which has been taking place in the relationships of the component parts of the British empire to the mother country and the imperial Parliament, destiny, it would seem, is likely to draw together the two great English-speaking nations constituting North America.

So long as the Dominion plays the game fairly with the United States any equitable plan to expand mutual trading is calculated to lead in the right direction. It is one thing to practice reciprocity between two peoples enjoying equal standards of living, and another between Americans and other peoples on a drastically lower economic scale, where wage rates do not compare with ours.

The principle of reciprocity between Canadians and Americans is thoroughly sound.

Whether the new treaty is sound or unsound will have to be determined by events.

Here is a Canadian view voiced by Robert Cromie, forceful editor of the Vancouver Sun:

"It just had to come. The economic unity of North America is as natural and inevitable as the sunrise. President Roosevelt and Premier King were clever in framing this trade treaty because the high technological development of our two countries makes it sure that they must either work together or destroy each other in an industrial and commercial way.

"Canadians have been buying two dollars' worth of goods in the United States for every dollar spent by Americans in Canada. Such disparity could not continue. The Americans have between three and four billions of dollars invested in Canada. The only possible way they could have protected that investment was by undoing the untold trade damage effected by the Fordney-McCumber and the Hawley-Smoot tariff scales.

"The North American continent is a functional organic unit. You cannot separate the parts of the body and you cannot separate the parts of the North American continent."

Under our idiotic system championed by Secretary of State Hull, Oriental and other atrociously low-wage nations are extended every privilege granted any other nation, including Canada, which enters into a tariff-lowering arrangement with us.

Canada, of course, is under no such obligation. She, in common with other parts of the British Empire, reserves the right to make specific deals among themselves, without obligation to granting exactly the same concessions to Orientals or others.

It is quite possible that the working out of the new treaty may bring fewer perils from our commercial and agricultural intercourse with Canada than from our ridiculous unbusiness-like, indefensible altruism of gratuitously opening our markets to nations which offer no quid pro quo.

Here is one problem Congress could and should attack at next session.

"Double Suicide" Scare In Shop Cellar

Meter Reader Sees Weird Sight as Flashlight Dies

By FLOYD GIBBONS

Publication of your story may be delayed a bit while Floyd is in the war zone, because of the time it takes his mail to reach him. Floyd asks all his adventurers to "be patient with a hard workin' feller."

HELLO EVERYBODY:

Well sir, today's column is dedicated to the boys who come around to your house once a month. You know the lads I mean—the ones who knock at your back door and go down in the cellar with a flashlight to read your electric and gas meters. It seems that there is one bunch of adventurers that has been forgotten. Nobody ever thinks of them as having interesting and often thrilling work to do. But Philip MacDonald of 200 48th street, Union City, N. J., says that it is far from being a monotonous job. And to prove his point, he's going to tell us a story.

FLOYD GIBBONS

Five or six years ago, Phil MacDonald used to be a meter reader himself, so he is not talking from hearsay. And on November 19, 1920—how well he remembers that date!—he walked down into what looked like just another cellar, and got the thrill of his life.

It was on a day when Phil's route lay in the Greenwich Village section. He was going along Eighth street, working west from Broadway, until he came to a little shop which he had been in several times before. The meters were in the cellar, and to get to them you had to open a trap-door in the floor of the shop and go down a rickety wooden ladder.

The shop was a sort of an antique and curio store, owned by a young married couple. Usually, when Phil got there, one or both of the owners were behind the counter. But this day the store was curiously silent.

Phil yelled "Electric" several times, but no one answered. He thought that was sort of strange, but his route was heavy and he wanted to get through on time, so he decided to go down in the cellar without waiting for anyone to show up. The trap-door was behind one of the counters, and usually was kept closed. But this time, to Phil's surprise, it was thrown back, wide open.

"For a moment," says Phil, "I thought the owners of the shop might be in the cellar, but as there was no light connection, and nothing was ever stored down there, that seemed highly improbable. The place was black as pitch as I descended the ladder, and as soon as I reached the floor, I unsnapped the flashlight from my belt and switched it on. To my disgust, I got only a feeble glow from it. The battery, evidently, was on its last legs.

"A peculiar feeling took possession of me—a sense that something was wrong. I decided then to get those readings and get up and out into the street again as quickly as possible.

"The meters were up front, and I turned around and directed my flashlight there. Then—I saw them! Two naked bodies—a man's and a woman's—HANGING BY THEIR THROATS FROM ONE OF THE BEAMS!"

Phil stopped dead in his tracks. His knees began to go weak under him. The bodies seemed to sway in the feeble rays of his flashlight.

Says Phil: "After the first horrible shock had lessened a bit, I came to the conclusion that it must have been a double suicide of the proprietor and his wife. But before I had a chance to think any more about it, I heard a noise behind me and whirled around. Seeing those naked bodies swing from a beam had been bad enough, but what I saw now literally froze the blood in my veins. For coming toward me was a figure in a long, white garment, WITH A GLITTERING WEAPON IN ITS HAND!"

The blood pounded in Phil's temples. His brain began racing at top speed. And then, suddenly, everything seemed clear to him. A madman had murdered the proprietor and his wife, and now he was coming toward Phil with the same horrible intention.

"Things looked pretty hopeless," says Phil. "I stood no chance of getting past him and reaching the ladder, and there was no other way out of the place. A cry for help would never be heard. In desperation I grasped the heavy barrel of my flashlight. 'Don't come any nearer,' I said, and I don't deny my voice was far from being steady. 'If you do, I'll bend this over your head.'"

And to Phil's amazement, the man laughed. "Are you crazy?" he asked Phil. "What's wrong with you?" And only then did Phil realize that it was the shopkeeper himself. The white garment was his white artist's smock and the glittering weapon in his hand was only another flashlight.

Phil threw the feeble glow of his exhausted flashlight on the nude figures hanging from the beam. "What's happened here?" he asked. "And when he told me," says Phil, "I could have kicked myself. What I had thought were nude bodies were merely a couple of artists' dummies which the proprietor had made in the rear of his shop, and which he had hung on the cellar beams in order that the flesh-colored paint might dry. And that was what he had come down to see about, just before I had entered and gone down myself."

Well, it was a clean-cut case of the joke being on Phil, and he and the proprietor had a good laugh over it. But laugh or no laugh, he doesn't want to go through the same experience again.

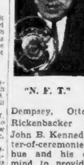
Artists Honor McManus During Gala Broadcast

By N. F. T.

Some very big doings by the "Banshees" tonight. Radio facilities are carrying the fun (WEEI) from coast to coast at 10:30 P. M.

It's a banquet in honor of George McManus, celebrated Boston Evening American and Sunday Advertiser cartoonist, the creator of "Bringing Up Father," and the greatest corned beef and cabbage booster in the country.



"N. F. T."

Famous funmakers will be there and heard by the air audience. Among them loom the names of "Bugs" Baer, "Believe-It-Or-Not" Ripley, Billy De Beck, Damon Runyon, Lowell Thomas, Jack Dempsey, Otto Soglow, Eddie Rickenbacker and Bill Corum. John B. Kennedy is to do the master-of-ceremonies duty. Al Donahue and his orchestra have in mind to provide tunes that were popular 25 years ago when "Jiggs and Maggie" made their bow to the comic page patrons of America.

All of which is happening to properly observe the 25th anniversary of the "Bringing Up Father" feature, currently having a daily reader clientele of over 20,000,000 subscribers in more than 30 countries.

This evening when "Uncle Newt" stages his "Secret Agent X-9" airing (WAAB) little 8-year-old Lillian Harvey of Boston and 13-year-old Billy Starrett, likewise a local lad, come to the air waves under Boston Evening American auspices. Time switches back to 6:30 again. Ruth Hansen and Joe Lally lend their marked talents to the "mike" doings for boys and girls, as usual.

It seems in order to put some warranted praise on paper having heard the new "Metropolitan Singers" group of 100 male voices (WNAC) last night. It's the new Karl Frost show, the vocalists being business and professional men of Boston. But they are also singers decidedly above par. Anticipating their choral half hour from week to week on Monday nights is pleasant contemplation, to say the least.

* * *

Sons of Union Veterans in Massachusetts are paying tribute to the memory of President Garfield this afternoon (WEEI) with 4:45 to 5 o'clock set aside and Dr. Albert Bushnell Hart speaking. President Garfield was a youthful colonel of Ohio troops in the Civil War and a boyhood idol of Dr. Hart, at present in his 82nd year.

"Excuse It, Please" Sings Raw Deal

THE song the Raw Deal is singing now is entitled "Excuse It, Please."

The chorus of male sopranos in Washington is warbling that apologetic ditty whenever it appears in public these days.

Mr. Secretary Ickes has just obliged with a solo in which he tells the audience that those orders for German steel for New York's Triborough Bridge didn't really mean anything.

American steel is good enough for him, he explains—even if its manufacture does put American workers to work instead of German workers.

Next thing you know he may launch into "The Stars and Stripes Forever," and we must say that it would be edifying to hear that inspiring air again from anybody on the banks of the Potomac.

The music down that way for the last two years has been a medley of "Let Me Call You Sweetheart" and the Communist "Internationale."

ANOTHER Washington vocalist, Mr. Secretary Roper, serenades American business with a genuinely touching ballad, the burden of which is that those solar-plexus blows which the Raw Deal has handed it were merely love-taps.

Some singing will be required to convince business that the beating it has taken was a sign of esteem, and that its black and blue marks prove the Raw Deal's ardent affection for it.

But Romeo Roper twangs his guitar under its balcony and chirps in dulcet tones that everything is going to be jake from now on.

We await the next number on the program with interest.

We shall not be greatly surprised if that sterling performer, Rexford G. Tugwell, gives us a song in praise of rugged individualism.

A song and dance.

Driven From "Paradise"

Moscow Reds were surprised the other day to find a revolutionary in their midst preaching against their system of faith, and thereby advocating the overthrow of their Government.

The agitator, Ernest Elmer Baker, a cowboy evangelist of Texas, attempted to preach the Gospel in the shadow of the Kremlin, and even told two Red guards:

"Put up your six-shooters and listen to the words of Jesus Christ."

The Reds decided this man was dangerous. He was a foreigner, an American citizen, and he battled the Soviet idea of Godlessness.

As a result HE WAS SUMMARILY DEPORTED from the "workers' paradise."

No doubt this will cause high merriment among the swarm of alien Communists in this country who deny God, advocate the overthrow of our Government and ARE FINANCED BY OUR OWN ADDLE-PATED RULERS who permit them to stay on the relief rolls at OUR expense

Resolve to Drive Slowly

Traffic dangers facing motorists and pedestrians alike were multiplied by the recent snowfall in New England.

Excessive speed, always hazardous, is more dangerous than ever in Winter, when roads are slippery and traction uncertain.

To drive with care should be the resolution of every motorist NOW. Tomorrow may be too late.

No trip, however urgent, is worth the loss of a life.

Public Debt 55 Billions, Declares Borah

By James T. Williams, Jr.

Just before Congress adjourned Senator Borah of Idaho rendered a real public service by laying before the Senate some startling facts and figures about the tax burden under which the American people are already doomed to stagger for years to come.

According to this survey, our national wealth in 1914 was estimated to be 192 billions of dollars, and the public debt of the United States Government in the same year was approximately a billion dollars.

In 1920 the national wealth had increased to 488 billion dollars and the public debt approximated 26 billion dollars.

DEBT REDUCED

By 1930 the National Industrial Conference Board estimated the national wealth to be 329 billion dollars, and the national debt had been reduced to approximately 16 billion dollars.

Then came a drastic curtailment of national wealth, it dropped in 1930 32 billion dollars below what it was in 1929. In 1931 it dropped 49 billion dollars below what it was in 1930. It dropped in 1932 33 billion dollars below the 1931 figure.

In other words, the survey shows that the United States lost in national wealth from 1929 to 1932 at least 114 billions of dollars.

This means that the depression has cost this country in devaluation alone at least 1/3 billions of dollars.

What has happened to the public debt? This expert survey showed that, at the beginning of the depression, the public debt approximated 16 billion dollars. By the middle of 1931 it had shot up to 19 billion 400 million dollars.

A year later it had gone to 22 billion 500 million dollars.

A year later the public debt had increased to 27 billion dollars.

When Congress adjourned last summer the public debt approximated 29 billion dollars, and the enactments at the last session of Congress permitted it to go to 45 billion dollars.

This debt burden is not the whole burden which debt has put upon the people of this country. These figures refer only to the national debt. But, as Senator Borah pointed out in the memorandum he submitted to the Senate:

"The national debt is only part of the picture. The debt of the 48 States, with three thousand odd counties, the 16 thousand odd cities, towns and villages, the 128 thousand school districts, the 19 thousand townships and the 14 thousand other subdivisions—all with power to incur public debt, and in all amounting to one hundred and eighty-two thousand political units—was less than five billion dollars in 1914."

What is the whole truth about this vital matter which affects not only the welfare of grown people today but jeopardizes the future of American youth for years to come?

Today the public debt of the 48 States, according to the memorandum submitted by Senator Borah, is at least two billion five hundred million; and the public debt of local governments, which, in 1932, before special studies were made, was announced at 17 billion 500 million, has been found to be approximately 21 billion dollars.

In other words, the spendthrift politicians in the Federal, State and local governments have put a first mortgage on a two-hundred-billion-dollar America of 55 billion dollars and still "the dance of the billions" goes merrily on wherever these spendthrifts remain in power.

Listen, World

By Elsie Robinson

The garden is a shaggy tangle now. Nothing orderly any more—nothing unscarred. All the small, sharp prettiness of spring gone, the fat fullness of summer.

Now you see, openly, the mark of all the days—rough wind and sun—and times when everything lay drowned in fog. Even the mark of lonely, waiting nights. It's all there now.

Elsie Robinson

Not covered up, or tied back, any more.

And yet—it's not like something finished. Rather like something that at last has come complete . . . like some fine face that's dared to walk with life.

I wonder why they think an autumn garden's dead!

The leaves pile in a coppery litter on the walk. Between the bricks, the weeds sprout undisturbed—gay, ragged tufts and tassels like those quirks of character that keep real folk from being commonplace.

THE CHANGING GARDEN

Last June it was smooth green—but now there's tarweed, thyme . . . a small, rough thistle with a scarlet bloom.

The iris blades are shafts of tarnished gold. The brier stems seem wrought in burnished bronze with scarlet pods that shine like lacquered wood.

The maple leaves are tattered, crimson silk . . . The whole place drips with color . . . But each morning there's a film, like silver lace, of cobwebs strung from bush to bush.

Few flowers left. A tattered bush of fawn chrysanthemums whose petals smell of cinnamon and clove.

Michaelmas daisies in a sprawling mass—their cloudy blossoms all afoam with bees. Brown pansies—with small faces like cross gnomes. And heather, spreading like a smoky mist.

Not many blossoms, but berries everywhere — like gypsy tribes that come when tamer things are gone. This year was good for berries.

Some are deep maroon—as dark as blood drops on their glossy stems. And some—their tan leaves lined with grayish fur—are light, dull coral. A touch of frost will make them shine like flame . . . Against their round, pale leaves, snowberries gleam, in globes of waxy light.

Even the resting earth is different, in these autumn days—purple as eggplant—damply rich, and still. And fragrant, too, with all the crumbled perfume of the year—pollen and petal, aromatic gum, dissolved to dust by sun and wind and rain.

The light lies low and thick, a honey-colored glaze in which the garden floats, a blur of rose and jade.

SHAGGY TANGLE NOW

The garden is a shaggy tangle now, yet somehow lovelier than any other time—richer with meaning. Each day the mystery deepens like a spell. Almost, one hears low laughter . . . catches faint, sweet calls . . . feels trailing fingers clutch as one goes by.

Old age, I think, should come to us like that. Not hated, dreaded, like an ugly fate. But like a lovely ripening—rich release!

There's so much more to life than bud and blossom—busy summer, pretty spring. The harvest time's the proudest time of all!

To show, at last, all that we've won from life . . . wearing our wrinkles like a Croix de Guerre. To come at last, all pettiness, and display the rich and varied tangle of the soul and flesh . . . the secret wildness which gives life its tang . . . the mirth that burst, like scattered seeds, from out drab bonds . . . the passion that we dared not show, unpruned.

To be, at last, our own, rich, glowing selves.

I wonder why we think an autumn garden's dead.

I wonder why we shrink from age with dread.

Few things are impossible where diligence and skill are at work.—Dr. Samuel Johnson.

New York Day by Day

By O. O. McIntyre

New York, Nov. 19—The ancient camaraderie that existed back stage between players and scene shifters and resulted in a closing night jollification by all connected with the theater is but a memory. When a show closes today there is scarcely a goodby.

O. O. McIntyre

The see-saw between unions and producers has produced this tension. Everybody carries a chip on the shoulder and usually there is a storm brewing. Richard Mansfield, testiest of the stars, had a sentimental regard for those who made up the house staff, front and back.

He rarely spoke to a fellow player save through lines of the play.

But when his runs ended he invariably saw to it that each member of the company and all connected with the house received a gold piece.

Maude Adams also presented each with a gift in person.

A minor member of Mansfield's company was once imveigled to a hospital for 12 weeks. Mansfield paid the expenses.

One night after his return to duty, the actor sought Mansfield to thank him. He glared and shouted: "I don't know what you are talking about." And stamped away.

On his vast estate near New Bedford, Mass., Col. E. H. R. Green, son of the famous Hetty, has a Boston terrier that is the apple of his eye.

When feminine visitors show the pet especial attention he disappears without command and returns with a packet in his mouth to drop at their feet.

The packet contains a vanity case with the Boston's head done in cloisonne.

Cole Porter seems to have edged Noel Coward completely out of the spot as the reigning ultra-sophisticate.

While he has none of the conversation ascerbities of the Englishman, he has been able to say it so expressively with song he has become almost a cult. Smart party throwers angle for him.

Such honors are not particularly new to Porter. The South Bend, Ind., lad with the Buddha gaze was something of a white-haired boy in London's Mayfair before attaining his New York popularity. Also along the French Riviera.

Ambitious litterateurs out-country will be heartened by the sudden writing recognition for James Street, a young New York reporter.

His formative days were spent jumping puddles and loafing on a lard can in front of a Mississippi cross-roads store.

He came to New York less than two years ago and a few words ago sold at first effort the only book he ever tried to write. A publishing house took it on strength of the first six chapters.

A Real Gentleman

Human Side of the News

By Edwin C. Hill

THE GLOBE TROTTER OF HEARST METROTONE NEWS

Certain names, occurring to the eye, or falling upon the ear, stir the imagination, inspire pictures. A single one of such names may be as eloquent as a volume of biography.

Edwin C. Hill

"Cecil" takes us back, indeed, to the great reign of the red-haired Queen, England's Gloriana, and brings us up through the stirring centuries as little England expanded into a vast empire.

On some what lesser scale, but very intriguing to the imagination, is the name of "Chesterfield." It occurs again because it is brushed again by the wings of Azrael.

The eleventh Earl of Chesterfield, at the age of 80, has departed this troubled world for what is doubtless a much better existence.

SYMBOL OF COURTESY

Just as "Cecil" stands for British history of the past three hundred years, so "Chesterfield" symbolizes the importance of courtesy in civilized existence.

The very name is the synonym for politeness and good breeding. Yes, and something more—effortless courtesy, that added distinction of gentility which comes from the heart rather than from calculated intelligence.

Even today, in a rough and tumble world where even eminent statesmen are incessantly hurling rude epithets, the term "Chesterfieldian manners" retains definite significance.

The eleventh Earl was a sailor of an historic family of sailors. He served with the Nile expedition for the relief of General Gordon in Khartoum in 1884.

He retired with the rank of captain in 1905. But he did not succeed to the title until 1933, earl at the age of 78.

The brothers traced their descent to the first earl, and were collateral descendants of Philip Stanhope, fourth Lord Chesterfield, whose name for a century and a half as the perfect synonym for courtesy. Without the slightest intention of producing a textbook on courtesy for the benefit of future generations, the fourth Lord Chesterfield, nevertheless, did produce one of the best textbooks ever written on the conduct of men. It is the book of letters to his son, traveling abroad.

The wise old nobleman had grasped one of the great principles of human existence, that manners are as important as morals and that, in fact, good manners are very apt to produce good morals.

LETTERS WORTH READING

Procure and read Lord Chesterfield's letters to his son. The little volume will repay you, for there is scarcely an expressed sentiment or counsel which is not applicable today. To his son, the Earl wrote:

"There is hardly a man who has not a dominant passion to which all others are subservient. Discover this governing passion in every individual . . . And when you have found out the ruling passion of a man, remember never to trust him where that passion is concerned."

There may be a touch of cynicism in the letters, but Chesterfield's observations were based, after all, on very sound sense and keen observation of human nature.

He wrote again to the young man traveling abroad:

"If you wish particularly to gain the good graces and affection of certain people, try to discover their most striking merit, if they have one, and their dominant weakness, for everyone has his own. Then do justice to the one and a little more than justice to the other."

Japan's Trail of Fire in China

While Italy's Ethiopian war is making headlines, Japan is quietly making real progress in China.

With the tenacity of purpose that characterizes the Orient, Nippon pushes relentlessly on, determined to write with bullets and poison gas the modern history of China.

This never-before-published picture shows the devastation that marked Japan's trail of blood and fire through defenseless Shanghai during the last "penetration."

Now Tokyo announces a new nation, like Manchoukuo will be born this week of the might of Japan's military machine, which China is powerless to oppose.

Ninety-five million natives face new masters.

Behind the headlines real history is in the making in the Orient today.

The picture shows how it is made, too.

Little, Red School

By Winifred Black

Goodby, little red schoolhouse! They say that you and all the rest of your family are going to be torn down before the next year start swinging down the spring wind.

The PWA has $132,000,000 to put into the new schoolhouses. Thus, goodby to the little one-room places with a wood stove in the corner and the black board decorated by pictures of baskets of golden rod drawn in colored chalk.

Everything is going to be ship-shape and new, modern and airy, with lots of room and plenty of ground for the boys and the girls to play on.

There will be a gymnasium with all kinds of dudads so the children will be sure to get plenty of exercise, and a faucet instead of an old wooden pail and its freckled tin dipper

TEACHERS GO, TOO

The old-fashioned teachers will step along with the schoolhouses too, and maybe that's just as it should be.

But dear me!

I like to think of the days when Miss Ella Yalding was going to a party in the evening. The big girls took down her hair and combed it and brushed it, and did it up in braids and wound it around Miss Ella's rather pretty head.

They did all this while the little ones were spelling or doing their writing lessons on their slates and nobody thought a thing about it.

Oh, the children will learn—in the new schoolhouses. They will learn a lot and some of it, to my say of thinking, could best be forgotten.

BEAT CITY CHILDREN

I never can quite forget a certain competition with prizes which were tickets to a gigantic fair in a middlewestern city.

The state which was holding the competition was divided into senatorial districts.

But lo and behold! When the competition was over, out of 21 children only two came from the city schools.

The country children in their little red schoolhouses knew more arithmetic and more grammar, and they could draw better maps. Well, they just simply snowed the city children under—root and branch.

Well, go on with your new schoolhouses, my friends, but for goodness sake, put some old human nature and old human common sense and old, human courage into your classes!

'Dear Govt.' -:-

By Winston Norman

Hon. Harry Hopkins,
Out-of-Work Department,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Hopkins:

For heaven sake, Mr. Hopkins, what has went wrong with your Boon-Doggle Program? All of I & my wife's relatives was took off the Dole like you promised, but they haven't found no work & they are living off of us.

Mr. Hopkins, there is 8 people trying to live in our 3-room flat. This morning when I wanted to shave I didn't have no room to work up a lather, what with my 2 kids fighting in the Bathtub, my brother-in-law Jake reading the newspaper, and my wife's mother hanging on the door for us to let her in quick.

The last relative which moved in was Jake. I tried to throw him out. I says, "It don't matter none if they took you off the Dole, because Mr. Hopkins will put you to work."

"Oh, no, he won't," says Jake, kind of laughing, "because I am a Flute Player by trade, and the WPA don't have no Flute Projeck to put me on."

About ½ hour later the bell rung again, it was my wife's mother.

"I am moveing in," she says, "they took me off the Dole."

It turned out there wasn't no WPA Projeck for her, neither, because she don't even play a Flute, she is nothing but a Mother-in-law.

The next 2 times the bell rung, it was an Aunt on my wife's side and a 5th Cousin on my own side, which I hadn't saw in years.

So here we are, Mr. Hopkins, with our house full of relatives, and when you & Mr. Roosevelt spent $4,000,000,000 to end the Dole, I didn't never suspect that you was starting something even worse.

Please think up some WPA Work Projecks for my Relatives. I am hereby makeing a list of what they can do:

1 Flute Player named Jake, age 40.

1 Mother-in-Law, very good at public speaking.

1 Wife's Aunt, age 53, lost job with FERA when you begun the WPA.

1 Cousin, age 37, retired Flagpole-Setter.

1 Man, age about 50, which I don't know from Adam, but he just rung the bell and says he is my uncle.

Yours in trouble,

W. NORMAN.
